December 13, 2011

The Beginning of the End of the Road? Britain and the European Council meeting, 8/9 December 2011

By: Simon Green  |  In: Business & Economics, Foreign & Domestic Policy
Issues: Economic Policy  |  Tags: Cameron, Debt Crisis, European Union, UK

Dr. Simon Green is a Professor of Politics and International Relations at Aston University, UK, and is a frequent contributor to AICGS publications and events.

What will the outcome of last week’s EU summit mean for the future of the UK’s position within the Union? According to Dr. Simon Green, Professor of Politics at Aston University, UK, it could spell disaster for Britain in the single market of the EU. In his essay entitled The Beginning of the End of the Road? Britain and the European Council meeting, 8/9 December 2011, originally published in Aston University’s Aston Centre for Europe blog, Dr. Green explains that Prime Minster David Cameron’s decision to exclude the UK from the EU’s new intergovernmental pact will alienate the UK from the Union more than ever before.

To read Dr. Green’s essay, please click here.