Maritime Expressions: A Corpus Based Exploration of Maritime Metaphors

Synopsis

This study uses a purpose-built corpus to explore the linguistic legacy of Britain's maritime history found in the form of hundreds of specialised 'Maritime Expressions' (MEs), such as TAKEN ABACK, ANCHOR and ALOOF, that permeate modern English. Selecting just those expressions commencing with 'A', it analyses 61 MEs in detail and describes the processes by which these technical expressions, from a highly specialised occupational discourse community, have made their way into modern English.

The Maritime Text Corpus (MTC) comprises 8.8 million words, encompassing a range of text types and registers, selected to provide a cross-section of 'maritime' writing. It is analysed using WordSmith analytical software (Scott, 2010), with the 100 million-word British National Corpus (BNC) as a reference corpus. Using the MTC, a list of keywords of specific salience within the maritime discourse has been compiled and, using frequency data, concordances and collocations, these MEs are described in detail and their use and form in the MTC and the BNC is compared.

The study examines the transformation from ME to figurative use in the general discourse, in terms of form and metaphoricity. MEs are classified according to their metaphorical strength and their transference from maritime usage into new registers and domains such as those of business, politics, sports and reportage etc. A revised model of metaphoricity is developed and a new category of figurative expression, the 'resonator', is proposed. Additionally, developing the work of Lakov and Johnson, Kovesces and others on Conceptual Metaphor Theory (CMT), a number of Maritime Conceptual Metaphors are identified and their cultural significance is discussed.

Keywords:, maritime conceptual metaphor, maritime language, occupational discourse, specialised discourse, resonator,

1 Introduction

This is a study of the language of a specific occupational discourse, and its influence on modern English. It explores the processes by which the highly technical language of British seafarers has become embedded within the everyday language of English speakers throughout the world, so that their words and idioms form an integral part of much of the figurative language we use to describe the world in virtually every field of human activity.

Britain's maritime history has shaped our culture and national identity as well as having far reaching effects throughout the rest of the world.

... for all our cultural differences, the island peoples of Britain became for a while the most successful maritime nation in modern history, creating the largest empire of all time, backed by the strongest navy and the largest merchant fleet. And Britain is still a maritime nation.

The sea has been regarded as central to ideas of British identity since at least the time of the Spanish Armada. The idea of ships as the 'wooden walls' of England was used by Lord Coventry in the 'Ship Money Trials' of Charles 1 in 1634, when the king attempted to levy a tax on all communities within 15 miles of the English Coast:

The dominion of the sea, as it is an ancient and undoubted right of the crown of England, so it is the best security of the land. The wooden walls are the best walls of this kingdom. (Howell, 1809:638)

Despite an apparent decline in Britain's in maritime power and influence since World War II, the idea of a maritime nation is still strongly preserved in our culture, as witnessed by The Sunday Telegraph supplement of 11th October 2009: 'Stories of the Sea', a sixteen-page supplement celebrating 'a Truly Maritime Nation', featuring a series of articles on all aspects of 'Britain's Maritime Heritage Today' (Owen, 2009), or a simple 'Google' search (18/11/2010) for 'BBC maritime history programmes', which yielded 184,000 'hits'. In 2010, nine separate maritime-themed features were listed, including a major BBC 4, series 'Sea Fever', focussing on 'Britain's maritime history, culture, economics and science' made up of various programmes totalling some 24 hours of broadcasting (Parker, 2010), as well as a four-part television series on BBC 2: 'Empire of the Seas: How the Navy Forged the Modern World', presented by historian Dan Snow (Clarke, 2010). More recently, in late 2013, one of the BBC's most respected journalists, David Dimbleby, wrote and presented a new major documentary series 'Britain and the Sea', exploring 'Britain's rich maritime heritage' (Hodgeson et al., 2014).

This study is particularly concerned with how that maritime history has influenced and shaped our language, our conceptualisation of the world and the British people.

There is a tide in the affairs of men, Which taken at the flood, leads on to fortune. Omitted, all the voyage of their life is bound in shallows and in miseries. On such a full sea are we now afloat. And we must take the current when it serves, or lose our ventures.

(Shakespeare: Julius Caesar IV.ii.269-278)

Maritime expressions (MEs), such as TAKEN ABACK, GO AHEAD, WORK ALONGSIDE and BATTEN DOWN THE HATCHES, are used on a daily basis, usually without any awareness on the part of the user, of their source or original meaning. They have been the subject of much popular, if not academic, interest over the years, with a number of writers (Covey-Crump, 2009, Isil, 1996, Jeans, 2004, Jolly, 1999, King et al., 2000, Rogers, 1985, Smyth, 1867) attempting to provide more or less authoritative descriptions and explanations of maritime language for both the specialist and the layman to use. None of these writers, however, have used corpora to collect their evidence, relying on more traditional methods and their own knowledge and intuition to compile their lexicons, neither do they attempt to look beyond the etymologies to examine the deeper conceptual ideas that the MEs represent.

1.1 Some Historical Background

The discourse community that produced the language being analysed here is that of seafarers and those that lived and worked with them.

They were cut off from society and physically cut off too. The extensive docks built in London and Liverpool ... were so enclosed and self sufficient that they became 'docklands' populated by seamen, longshoremen and coal-whippers, as well as whores and tavern owners. ...in fact separate working class areas detached from society and avoided by it. (Lundy, 2002:213)

However, that isolated discourse community has, since the reign of Elizabeth I and the defeat of the Spanish Armada in 1588, been highly influential in its effect on the English language and this country's cultural sense of identity. By the end of the Seven Years War in 1763, when the total population of the country was around six million (Wrigley and Schofield, 1981), some 10% of the country's working population, 180,000 men, were serving in the Royal Navy on, or in support of, some 500 ships of all sizes (Crystal, 2005:454). During the same period, the British mercantile fleet had risen to in excess of 9000 registered vessels (NMM, 2010). These numbers continued to grow throughout the period of the Napoleonic wars and imperial expansion, so that by the end of the eighteenth century the:

naval dockyards were the world's largest industrial complex, providing large-scale employment and consuming vast quantities of materials. They provided the infrastructure that supported British sea power. (NMM 2010)

By contrast, today the combined manpower of the Royal Naval and mercantile services numbers less than 70,000 personnel (2010) (DASA 2010); less than 0.11% of the country's population of 61.8million (ONS, 2010). Despite this and despite the fact that the technology and working practices of modern seafarers have altered almost beyond recognition since the days of wind-driven ships, a significant part of their language has survived and been adapted for use in virtually every sphere of modern everyday life, contributing to the modern lexicon from 'Billboard'¹ to 'Skyscraper'² and 'Aloof' to 'Stand offish'. Extended maritime metaphors are chosen by speakers and writers in business, politics, journalism and sport, as illustrated by the author PD James, talking about the BBC in the Guardian Newspaper, in December 2009:

'I think [the BBC] has changed,' said Baroness James, ... 'And sometimes it seems like a very large and unwieldy ship that's been floating there since 1920 taking on more and more and more cargo, building more decks to accommodate it, recruiting more officers - all very comfortably cabined, usually at salaries far greater than their predecessors enjoyed - and with a crew somewhat discontented and some a little mutinous, the ship rather sinking close to the Plimsoll line and the customers feeling they paid too much for the journey and not quite sure where they're going, or indeed, who is the captain.'

1.2 Reasons for the Study

My own interest in the topic comes from my lifelong interest in naval history, my involvement in British traditional music and, in particular my research into traditional sea songs and shanties, some of which have been sung since the 1450s (Whall et al., 1986: x) by 'iron men in wooden ships' (Wallace, 1924), whose language is still to be found in modern English, in the writing and speech of sports journalists, politicians and businessmen, as well as being heard in everyday conversations and interactions. Much work has been done on metaphorisation and the role of conceptual metaphors in the expression of culture through language (Deignan, 2005, Deignan and Potter, 2003, Goatly, 2011, Hanks, 2010a, Kövecses, 2005, Kövecses and Koller, 2006, Lakoff and Johnson, 2003), but this is the first specific study of maritime metaphors to be undertaken.

Bill-boards. Doubling under the fore-channels to the waterline, to protect the planking from the bill of the anchor. (Smyth, 1867: 101-102)

² Sky-scraper. A triangular sail set above the skysail; if square it would be a moonsail, and if set above that, a star-gazer. (ibid: 630)

In my professional work as a teacher of English as a foreign language (EFL), I have continually been made aware of the difficulties encountered by English language learners in decoding idiomatic and figurative language, including, on a regular basis, maritime expressions. Furthermore, English is recognised as the international medium of communication for seafarers throughout the world (Ziarati et al., 2008). An issue of increasing importance to the international maritime community over the last two decades has been the quality of Maritime English training for non-English-speaking maritime personnel and the lack of unified standards of English testing (Shen, 2010) in maritime training establishments. This study makes a useful contribution to the analysis of what constitutes Maritime English, particularly with regard to literal and figurative meanings of expressions and with the identifying of obsolete language, which may appear in Maritime English text books used overseas (Reguzzoni, 2008, Shen, 2010). Furthermore the corpus approach reveals pertinent patterns of usage that can help with the disambiguation of the numerous, homonyms, polysemes and combinations found in Maritime English, which may differ significantly from their counterparts as used in the general discourse.

Considerable work has been done on the corpus analysis of particular specialised discourses (Gotti, 2003, 2008), especially English for Academic Purposes (EAP), (Biber, 2009, Biber and Barbieri, 2006, Biber, 2006, Biber et al., 2004, Flowerdew, 2004, Girden, 2001, Halliday and Webster, 2006, Hunston, 2002, Reershemius et al., 2011, Stubbe, 1998, 2001, Swales, 1990, 2004, Swales and Feak, 2004) due, perhaps, to the relatively easy access to research material in universities and its practical applications in the university context. There have also been a number of studies of scientific language, and in particular, of 'sub-languages', highly specialised areas of language with restricted lexis and grammar relating to specific, often very narrow, usually technical domains (Grishman and Kittredge, 1986) such as 'medical narrative' (Sager et al., 1987) or dictionary entries (Barnbrook, 2002) and studies of Business English (Nelson, 2000, 2006). But, perhaps because of the lack of availability of appropriate textual resources, very few studies of other specialised occupational discourses have been carried out that might help to decode many of the culturally embedded metaphors, fixed expressions and idioms (Knowles and Moon, 2006, Moon, 1998, 1994) that so trouble EFL students.

1.3 A Brief Outline

The study develops ideas explored originally in a corpus-based study (Isserlis, 2009) that used the CoBuild Bank of English TM based at the University of Birmingham, to describe 20 selected MEs, in terms of their geographical and register-specific usage. In that study, the MEs were selected from a database of maritime expressions constructed from the writer's own 'knowledge' of maritime language and the work of various writers, using intuition, conjecture and personal experience to establish the maritime origins of the expressions being explored.

This new study provides a detailed, systematic description of a selection of MEs, based on empirical corpus evidence. Using this empirical data, the study explores the use of these MEs in the general discourse, with a particular focus on the development of their metaphorical applications as they have moved from the maritime discourse into general usage.

The key research questions to be answered are:

1. From a corpus of maritime texts, how may maritime expressions be identified automatically and categorised lexically?
2. Of those maritime expressions that have become metaphorised, what model of metaphorisation may account for that process, and how may the identified metaphorised maritime expressions be classified within it?
3. From those maritime expressions that have become metaphorised, what general conclusions may be drawn?

In order to answer these questions, the Maritime Text Corpus (MTC), an 8.8 million-word³ corpus of maritime texts designed to capture a diachronic sample (1735 - 2010) of written maritime texts, ranging from official documents, including parliamentary reports and ship's papers, to reportage, letters, novels, diaries traditional songs and weblogs, has been constructed. Using the British National Corpus (BNC) as a reference corpus, 61 key maritime words commencing with the letter 'A' are identified in the MTC and tested in the BNC, through concordancing and cluster analysis, to see how they are used in modern English, as represented by the BNC.

Using collocation data, cluster lists and concordances, each keyword is then examined to identify fixed phrases and typical usage patterns, which can then be compared with data from the BNC. In this way a detailed profile of each expression is built up and the level of change in form and use described.

Chapter Two discusses the theoretical foundations of corpus analysis and defines and describes the terms and the tools used (2.1). It provides a rationale for the choice of reference corpus and explores the concepts of specialised corpora (2.1.1.3) and issues of balance and representativeness, before discussing corpus analysis software and giving an account of the analytical processes to be undertaken. Section 2.3 defines the use of the term ‘maritime’ in this work and goes on to define maritime texts, maritime expressions and multi-word expressions.

In Chapter Three, the subject of metaphoricity, the judgement of how metaphorical an expression is, and metaphorisation, the processes by which metaphors are formed, are discussed in detail, referring to the work of Deignan, Goatly and Hanks on the analysis and description of linguistic metaphors and to that of Lakoff, Johnson and Kovesces, with regard to conceptual metaphor theory. There is a discussion of the terminology used by these researchers and how it has been adopted and adapted for use in this study. I also list Maritime Conceptual Metaphors (MCMs) that are expressed by MEs in this study, which are refinements of a number of the overarching conceptual metaphors identified by Lakoff and Johnson (2003) and Kovesces (2002, 2005)

A model is proposed for the analysis of MEs, in terms of their metaphoricity, using a number of criteria such as Saliency, Resonance, Transparency and Semantic Class. A number of MEs are used to illustrate the model. I introduce the idea of ‘Key Meaning’ as a method for establishing whether expressions are transferred or extended when or if they move from the maritime domain into other discourses, and identifying the salient features that are exploited in specific metaphorical realisations.

MEs are categorised in terms of their literal/metaphorical status as found in the MTC and the BNC, and these categories form the basis for the analysis carried out in Chapter 5. They are: Non-ME, Technical/Literal ME, Transfer, Innovative Metaphor, Active Conventionalised Metaphor, Dormant Conventionalised Metaphor, Idiomatic Expression and a new classification of Resonator.

Chapter Four is concerned with the methodology and the tools chosen for the analysis. It provides a detailed description of the structure of the MTC and its subcorpora (4.1.1- 4.1.2) before describing the selection and processing of the texts that make up the corpus (4.1.3 - 4.1.6). There is a detailed discussion of the rationale behind the choice of the BNC as reference corpus and how it is used (4.2). The role of the Pilot Corpus is discussed, which also includes an account of how the corpus analysis tools were chosen (4.2.3). This is followed, in 4.3, by an account of the processes used to identify MEs, demonstrating the advantages of using corpus-driven methodologies to analyse the data. The chapter then describes the compilation of the MTC keyword list and outlines the approach taken to defining multi-word expressions within the terms of this work (4.3.2). Finally there is a detailed discussion of the statistical tools used in the analysis (4.3.3).

Chapter Five is the analysis, which looks in detail at the MEs identified in the keyword list, from ABACK to AYE, AYE!. In 5.1.1 the MTC Keyword list is described and, in 5.2, the analytical model, which is used to describe and classify the MEs in terms of their metaphoricity, is reviewed. The remainder of the chapter is given over to the detailed analysis and description of the MEs identified in the keyword list, organised by metaphorical class

The MEs are described in terms of their original and current meanings, as established through corpus analysis and dictionary definitions, from the OED, which also provides etymological evidence and word histories, and Advanced Learner Dictionaries (ALDs) that provide simplified definitions of terms as they are most commonly used in current English and thus demonstrate changed or additional meanings, especially where expressions have become idiomaticised. Original, traditional maritime definitions and usage are also established through reference to Smyth (1867), 'The Sailors Word-book', which contains in excess of 14,000 maritime expressions, with full definitions.

The 'salient cognitive/perceptual features' (Hanks, 2006:20) of each expression are identified, key metaphorical meanings are established and conceptual mappings are suggested.

Finally, Chapter Six summarises the study's findings, revisiting the original research questions to assess the effectiveness of the corpus methodology and the overall impact of the findings in the context of other research into linguistic and conceptual metaphors and their cultural significance. It discusses the overall achievements and shortcomings of the study before looking at possible implications, pedagogical applications and further research that might stem from this work.

2 Research Background

2.1 Defining the Terms

It is important that the terms used within this study are clearly defined. In particular we need to be clear as to the meaning behind some of the very basic concepts being discussed including such terms as corpus, maritime, maritime texts, maritime expressions. As this is a study primarily based on corpus data, I start by defining corpora and describing the basic principles of corpus linguistic work.

2.1.1 Corpora

In this work, a corpus is defined as a collection of digitised texts held on a computer, which can be analysed, usually using specialised software such as Wordsmith Tools (Scott 2010), as used in this study, or the Sketch Engine (Kilgarriff, 2004) or the BNC's Xaira software (BNC, 2007), to examine linguistic features of the texts, including lexicology, syntax, structure and semantics. Corpus analysis can aid in the description of language by analysing extremely large amounts of text very quickly, to reveal patterns of usage that might otherwise be inaccessible to the intuition of the researcher, or in Sinclair's words:

The growing evidence we have [from computerised corpora] suggests that there is to be found a wealth of meaningful patterns that, with current perspectives, we are not led to expect. (2004:10)

An example, from the MTC data, is the case of the ME ABEAM (See 5.5.4) where a significant difference in construction can be identified between the original maritime use, as in:

The frigate was abeam of the headlands into the main river; slowly the fort drew abeam. (MTC/ MF/RW/DRI).

where, 'of' is always used where there is an object (i.e. 'the headlands', in this case) expressed in the sentence, and the transferred usage in the aviation discourse, as found in the BNC:

Timing for the outbound leg is defined as starting when the aircraft is abeam the holding point, or when the outbound heading is reached, whichever comes later. (BNC/G3K)

where the preposition 'of' is not used in any of the 12 instances found in the corpus.⁴

⁴ See also Hunston (2002:20-23) for an excellent summary of the power of the corpus as an analytical tool for the recognition of linguistic patterns.

A detailed description of the MTC and the methodology for identifying MEs in the corpus will be given in Chapter 3, but a brief overview here of what corpora are, how they are used and the basic terminology used, will help to define the nature of the study. For a more detailed introduction to corpora see McEnery and Wilson (2001), McEnery et al., (2006) and Stubbs (1996).

2.1.1.1 Background

Francis (1992:17) defines a linguistic corpus as:

A collection of texts assumed to be representative of a given language, dialect, or other subset of a language, to be used for linguistic analysis.

According to McEnery and Wilson (2001:9), in this sense, the use of corpora has been a feature of linguistic study since the late 1800s, with Friedrich Kaeding carrying out what is regarded as one of the ‘first major pieces of corpus research’ (Kennedy, 1992:365) by building a corpus of 11 million words in 1897, to compile statistical data on the German language for teaching purposes. Corpora were becoming well established by the time of West’s ‘General Service List of English Words’ (West, 1953), derived from a five million word written corpus (Nation and Waring, 1997), when physical collections of texts, or corpora, were built using slips of paper or index cards and analysed by hand and eye. However, the time and resources required to compile and analyse physical text corpora of any great size proved prohibitive; Kaeding’s German Word Book had to be analysed by hand by some five thousand trained analysts over several years (McEnery and Wilson, 2001:12). Moreover, such work was often criticised as flawed and the corpora as ‘skewed’ due to the necessarily finite nature of a corpus compared to the non-finite nature of natural language and the selection processes used by corpus compilers, along with a tendency of linguists to select and use the data to support existing theory, rather than allowing it to speak for itself and produce new data-led theories (See Chomsky (1962) and further discussion in McEnery and Wilson (2001:5-13)). Furthermore, Chomsky’s approach, which underpinned the prevalent theory of language in the 1950s and 60s, was based on ideas of speaker competence and an absolute reliance on speaker intuition as the arbiter of grammatical soundness, and was thus diametrically opposed to the empirical, data-led approach of corpus linguistics, even after the advent of computer corpora (Stubbs, 1996:24). The development of very large corpora and the evidence that has been gained from them over the last forty years has fundamentally changed the linguistics landscape:

It is no exaggeration to say that corpora, and the study of corpora, have revolutionised the study of language, and the applications of language over the last few decades. (Hunston, 2002:1)

2.1.1.2 Corpus-driven and Corpus-based research

... the whole point of making something a corpus rather than a collection of texts is in order to observe things which cannot be directly observed because they are too far apart, they are too frequent or infrequent, or they are only observable after some kind of numerical or statistical process.

(Sinclair, 2004:189)

Corpora can be used in various ways; studies fall essentially into three broad categories: corpus-driven, corpus-based or hybrid methodologies, mixing the first two approaches (Biber, 2009:278). The essential difference between the two main approaches lies in the starting position of the researcher. For Francis and Kucera (1961), designers of the first true computerised corpus, the Brown Corpus, in 1961, Sinclair (1991) and Tognini-Bonelli (2001) and other pioneers of modern corpus linguistics, the corpus provides a hitherto unattainable level of empirical data, allowing linguists, for the first time, to study language free of the presuppositions and intuition-led theories that continue to inform so much linguistic description. Pure corpus-driven research makes no presuppositions about the data and ideally avoids any form of mark-up or annotation of the corpus being used (Tognini-Bonelli, 2001:87, Sinclair, 2004:191). Data is drawn from the 'raw' texts and theories are formulated purely on the basis of the patterns that are revealed through the analysis of the statistical data:

The corpus driven approach differs from the standard practice of linguistics in that it makes minimal a priori assumptions regarding the linguistic constructs that should be employed for the analysis. (Biber, 2009:276)

Corpus-based research, on the other hand, is often used to test pre-existing theories and uses corpora to provide evidence:

to expound, test or exemplify theories and descriptions that were formulated before large corpora became available to inform language stud.

(Tognini-Bonelli, 2001:65).

The criticism often levelled at corpus-based work is that the search parameters and the frame of reference for the research are based on presuppositions that anticipate particular answers. As Sinclair (2004:191) points out, the very process of annotation of a corpus presupposes that the grammatical categories being imposed are correct and subsequent interpretation of the data is then fitted into that framework, precluding any opportunity for other interpretations of the data:

One cosy consequence of using tagged text is that the description which produces the tags in the first place is not challenged - it is protected. The corpus data can only be observed through the tags; that is to say, anything the tags are not sensitive to will be missed. (Sinclair, 2004:p191)

The MTC study uses a hybrid methodology; maritime expressions are identified using an un-annotated corpus of texts compiled opportunistically from readily available sources, defined by the researcher as 'maritime texts', and a general reference corpus, the BNC. The initial selection of data is made through the identification of keywords and subsequent analysis of collocational patterns. The keyword lists have been manually 'cleaned' by the elimination of non-maritime terms, proper nouns and non-words. In the case of 'non-maritime' words, this cleaning process is based on concordance data from the corpora, dictionary research, as well as a certain amount of existing knowledge about maritime language and its use, on the part of the author. A full account of this cleaning process is given in the Methodology Chapter (4.3.4).

The recognition of figurative and literal technical usage of expressions, which lies at the heart of this study, is based on collocational data from the corpus and dictionary evidence. However, while the analytical software can highlight patterns of usage and particular collocations that might characterise the metaphorical use of an expression, as opposed to a technical/literal one, ultimately interpretation lies with the human analyst, and similarly the classification of metaphorical types, although supported by evidence gained from the corpora, is down to the judgement of the analyst, informed by the work of others, such as Deignan (2005, 2006), Goatly (2011), Hanks (2006, 2010a) Kovecses (2005) and Lakoff and Johnson (2003).

While the study adheres to corpus driven principles in its reliance on un-annotated raw data and use of keyword and collocational evidence to identify expressions for analysis, the manual cleaning processes and text selections made in the compilation of the MTC are more in line with corpus based approaches. The study is not built around any pre-existing hypothesis about the nature of maritime metaphors, but it is designed to find and identify a predefined entity, the maritime expression, and thence to explore the nature and significance of maritime metaphors in the general discourse. It thus exploits the corpus evidence for a predetermined goal, rather than being a purely data-led investigation.

2.1.1.3 Specialised corpora for specialised discourses

Corpora are designed to meet the specific requirements (Hunston, 2002:14) of specific users with specific purposes to fulfil. The MTC is a specialised corpus designed to explore the specific area of maritime language and maritime expressions found in texts written over a period of some two centuries and across a range of text types.

Much of the information about MEs, particularly with regard to meaning and etymology, is available through dictionary research, using the OED for etymological and historical information, and ALDs for information on current usage, as well as publications such as Smyth's 'Sailor's Word-book' (1867), which gives a comprehensive account of sailors' terms in use during the nineteenth century. The MTC represents maritime language as it has been used in literature, reportage, journals and song and on the internet, spanning a period of over two hundred years. It provides the opportunity to study how a purely technical, occupational variant of English, confined to a specific discourse community, has provided so many figurative expressions in the general discourse, that express numerous maritime conceptual metaphors (MCM) that underpin some fundamental aspects of Britain's cultural identity. It provides over 8.8 million words of context for those expressions and the collected texts provide information on the social and cultural background that generated the expressions.

Maritime English can be seen as an occupational variety of language, it was born out of a highly specialised and often very isolated discourse community of men and women whose life and work has been tied to the sea for hundreds of years, as successive waves of seaborne invaders and settlers arrived on British shores and set about establishing trade with the rest of the world. Over that period, Maritime English has developed a lexicon that varies significantly from that of Standard English. The aim of the corpus is to describe certain features of the language, in particular the specialised MEs, that have made their way into modern English. The study provides a useful model for looking at other occupational varieties, through the construction of corpora made up of texts selected specifically for their relevance to a particular linguistic variety. McEnery et al., make the point that

As language may vary considerably across domain and genre (...), specialised corpora ... provide valuable resources for investigations in the relevant domains and genres. (McEnery et al., 2006: 61)

Specialised corpora designed for the analysis and teaching of academic language registers are relatively common; a search for academic corpora + classroom in academic journals, using the Aston University library search engine on 27th June 2013, produced a total of 66 articles and papers referring to such specialised corpora, used mainly in the language classroom, such as the one million word Limerick-Belfast Corpus of Academic Spoken English (LI-BEL CASE) (O'Keeffe and Walsh, 2012), the 'Learner-centred corpus of texts on biotechnology in French' (Rodgers et al., 2011) or the BCR-1 corpus of business case reports (Nathan, 2013). The search term academic corpora produced 3,219 articles and books.

The ready availability of digitised academic texts, such as research articles and student writing, in a wide but closely defined range of academic fields, means that highly specialised corpora can be developed as teaching aids relatively easily. For instance, Chang and Kuo (2011) have recently built a corpus of 60 research articles taken from three computer science journals to produce a corpus of 'discipline specific' language for teaching purposes. Pravec produced a survey of ten major 'Learner corpora' compiled from the writings of foreign language learners (2002) and since then such corpora have continued to be developed with projects such as the ICE corpora of New Englishes (ICAME, 2010).

In addition to these academic corpora, a number of other specialised corpora have been developed as discussed by Warren (2010), including the Hong Kong Engineering Corpus (HKEC) and the Hong Kong Financial Services Corpus (HKFSC), designed both as research and pedagogical resources and for members of the professions represented in the corpora to 'enhance their professional communication competencies' (Warren, 2010:169).

In 2000, Nelson built a one million-word corpus of spoken and written business English (Nelson, 2000, 2006), to be used for both pedagogical and research purposes and particularly to examine the semantic prosodies (Louw, 1993) and semantic associations (Hoey, 2004) of business English lexis and to compare it with the prosodies of the same lexis in 'general English' (Nelson, 2006:218). More recently, a far bigger corpus of Professional English (CPE) has been developed by the Professional English Research Consortium (PERC), with a corpus of seventeen million words being made available in 2010 and a goal of producing a '100 million-word computerised database of English used by professionals in science, engineering, technology and other fields' (Orr, 2009).

The corpora outlined above are synchronic, that is, they represent a cross section of current language at a given time. The MTC is a diachronic corpus containing texts that span nearly three hundred years. Other specialised diachronic corpora include the Helsinki Corpus of English Texts (Kyto, 1996) which contains texts:

covering the period from c. 750 to c. 1700 and a dialect part based on transcripts of interviews with speakers of British rural dialects from the 1970's.

The dialectal part of the corpus, which contains some 400,000 words from East Anglia, the South West, Yorkshire and Clare (Ireland) was compiled in the 1970s and transcribed orthographically from original recordings.

ARCHER (A Representative Corpus of Historical English Registers), built originally in the 1990's by Biber and Finegan (Biber et al., 1994a, Biber et al., 1994b) and now managed by a consortium of 14 universities from around the world, is another major specialised diachronic corpus. It is made up of British English and American English texts and, as of November 2010, the corpus totalled 1.7 million words, in texts dating from 1650 to 1999 (ARCHER, 2010).

There are now, therefore, large numbers of specialised corpora, serving many different functions, however, the MTC appears to be the only corpus to have been developed to provide data for an assessment of the influence of a specific occupational register on metaphorical expression in Standard English. While there are numerous specialised corpora of business, scientific and academic texts, often focusing on very specific parts of these registers, such as research articles, (Swales, 1981) or business case reports (Nathan, 2013) as cited above, very little corpus work appears to have been done on collecting texts from specific areas of work or specialised occupations.

Only one corpus, the Maritime English Pedagogic Corpus (MEPC), (Reguzzoni, 2006, 2008) has been found that might be regarded as being similar in nature and subject matter to the MTC, although its focus and purpose are markedly different. This is a small synchronic corpus (51,823 running words) of teaching materials used in an Italian maritime training school, as part of a study of the field of modern maritime English, to identify the key features of the variety for use in teaching Italian mercantile marine officers.

The study identifies keywords of the variety and discusses specific aspects of polysemy, homonyms and compounding that are a particular feature of maritime English and which can cause considerable difficulty for learners who need to understand the highly specialised way in which such expressions may be used in the maritime context, and how they might differ from their use in other contexts. Reguzzoni also picks up on an interesting feature of maritime language, not discussed in this study, which is the personification of ships and their component parts and processes through animal metaphors; thus ships are always she and expressions such as dogwatch, cathead, catwalk, crow's nest, donkeyman and monkey jacket are a significant feature of the language.

Reguzzoni's focus is very much on the issue of identifying 'core' meanings and the disambiguation of polysemous and homonymous expressions such as after, bank, bow, draught and frame, all of which have very specialised applications in maritime English that are completely at variance with their use in Standard English. Reguzzoni's aim is to identify the ‘maritime field—specific lexical items’ (2008:7) that students of Maritime English need to learn, and to devise teaching materials and approaches that would help them to understand the different uses of such language both within and outside the maritime discourse.

Another study (Fitzpatrick et al., 1986) might be regarded as being related to the MTC study, because it takes place within the maritime domain, in that it concerns the language of American Navy telegraphic messages. The study uses a very small corpus of 219 sentences to analyse the structure of what they call the ‘Navy message sublanguage’. From their study, they concluded that such sublanguages should be regarded as ‘languages that exhibit an internal consistency independent of the standard language’ (Fitzpatrick et al., 1986: 41).

Other than these two studies, there are various papers on specific technical, restricted sublanguages, including SeaSpeak (Stevens and Johnson, 1983) and Aviation Speak (Cambell-Laird, 2004) and even Cab Computer-Speak (Bell and Lonergan, 1992), a specially devised language for the operators, drivers and ancillary staff of the trans-channel rail link, which amalgamates English, French and Dutch elements into a specific, pared-down and simplified language designed to ensure the safety of the systems and avoid miscommunication problems across the rail network. These last varieties, however, are not what might be considered to be full natural languages, but are designed as lingua franca and are very different from the natural maritime English being described in this or Reguzzoni’s study.

The OED defines a sublanguage as:

1. A variety of a particular language, esp. as considered in relation to that language; a dialect.
2. A specialised subset of a language or system of notation; a jargon, slang, etc., associated with a particular group or context.

In this study, it could be argued that, according to these definitions, Maritime English, as represented in the MTC, is a sublanguage of Standard English, that is, it has specific features of technical lexis, in expressions such as ‘ABAFT THE BEAM’ or ‘LAID ABACK’ ‘STAMP AND GO’ and many hundreds of other phrases, that are entirely absent, or used with entirely different meanings on land, that mark it as different from the variety of English spoken by the general discourse community. However, sublanguages, as opposed to dialects are seen by Kitteredge and Lehrberger (1982) and others working in the field of natural Language Processing (NLP), as operating in much more tightly restricted, usually technical or scientific domains, where, in the words of Sager:

A sublanguage is characterized by distinctive specialisations of syntax and the occurrence of domain-specific word sub-classes in particular syntactic combinations. (1986:1)

Maritime English is a technical variant of Standard English but it generally obeys the rules of syntax that pertain in Standard English; it does not display the 'distinctive specialisations of syntax' that would qualify it as a true sublanguage in the sense used by Sager or Kittredge and Lehrburger, although, during the nineteenth century, it was specialised enough that Laura Alexandrine Smith, a collector of sea songs and shanties commented that:

Sailors' talk is a dialect as distinct from ordinary English as is Lowland Scotch. Certainly, English words are used, but their signification is many times remote from the meaning they have in shore parlance. The meaning of many sea-phrases is too subtle for translation; some fit vocational conditions so accurately, that any divergence from the exact expression would puzzle a seaman exceedingly. (Smith and Ballantyne, 1888:3-4)

SEASPEAK, AVIATION SPEAK and the language of the American naval message are deliberately simplified and restricted and the syntax is similarly simplified and does not conform to the norms of the general discourse. As an example, Figure 1, below, shows the standard format for exchanges in SEASPEAK, the international maritime sublanguage, or Standard Marine Communication Phrases (SMCP) as it is more properly termed. Each exchange is marked by its function, e.g. 'QUESTION' / 'ADVICE' followed by a simplified and formulaic set of phrases. The language is designed to be unambiguous so that there is little or no use of inflexion to mark tenses and grammar words are minimized to reduce the potential for confusion, particularly when holding discussions over the radio, with difficulties of poor reception as well as the linguistic challenges for non-native speakers of English. Certain specialised lexis is also part of the language, such as SEELONCE MAYDAY, which is the international expression to advise that a distress situation is in progress; the command coming from the ship in distress and SEELONCE FEENEE, which is the distress cancellation (Pritchard, 2003:15).

Beyond these very narrow artificial sublanguages, deliberately devised to simplify communication, there is a place for more work to be done to explore occupational discourses such as agriculture, mining, construction and other varieties that come from the industries and occupations that have shaped the cultural and linguistic landscape of modern English. These registers all have specific lexis and idioms which often underlie much of the figurative language that makes modern English so rich, but which also present challenges for foreign language learners, that such corpora might help to overcome.

2.1.1.4 The BNC Reference Corpus

In order to evaluate the specific features of maritime language and understand how it compares with Standard English and non-maritime language, a reference corpus, is required. The reference corpus needs to contain samples of a very wide variety of text types in order to represent as broad a spectrum of language as possible. Reference corpora are usually very large, with modern corpora consisting of many hundreds of millions of words, as, for instance, The British National Corpus (BNC): approximately 100 million words (Burnard, 2007c) or the Bank of English™ (BoE): 650 million words (CoBuild, 2010) or the two-billion word, ukWaC (The UK Web Archiving Consortium) corpus of web-texts.

For this study, the BNC has been selected, a decision based chiefly on the pragmatic grounds of ease of access and compatibility with the analytical tools being used. The ability to hold the corpus on a personal computer, rather than relying on sometimes tenuous network connections for access to essential data, as is the case with the BoE was a key factor. The BNC is held in its entirety on a single CD ROM, making it both portable and incorruptible. Furthermore, as a completed corpus of a fixed size, any queries and their outcomes will be repeatable, whereas 'monitor' corpora, such as the BoE or ukWaC are being continuously developed and expanded (Hunston, 2002:15, McEnery et al., 2006:67), so that it may be difficult to replicate results over time, as the corpora expand.

The BNC was developed between 1990 and 1994 by a consortium made up of dictionary publishers Oxford University Press, Longman and Chambers, working with Lancaster and Oxford Universities and the British Library. The aims of the builders were to produce a freely available, synchronic, 'contemporary' corpus that was 'at least a magnitude' larger than anything built up to that time, containing the 'full range of British English language production, both spoken and written' (Burnard, 2007b). The corpus, at 100 million words, is very much smaller than the Cobuild BoE, but the BoE is only available to a very restricted part of the research community and cannot therefore be described as freely available. The version of the BNC being used in this study is the third edition XML version, stored on CD ROM and comes with its own analytical software (Xiara).

Although the BNC is a fully marked-up, tagged and annotated corpus, for this study, I set WordSmith Tools to ignore the tagging and work with the raw data, in line with a corpus-driven approach, as discussed in 2.1.1.2.

The choice of reference corpus inevitably leads to compromise. The BNC is, to use the wording from the CD-ROM sleeve notes (Burnard, 2007a), 'a snapshot' of the language at a given time; it has not been added to or substantially amended with regard to content since it was originally published in 1994, thus it is now 20 years old, in a period that has seen very considerable linguistic change, particularly in areas regarding science, technology and computing. The exponential growth of the Internet and its infiltration into virtually every aspect of modern life is not represented in the language in the BNC.

In light of this, I had originally considered the ukWaC web texts corpus, built in 2007, using texts from UK domain-name websites (.uk) to provide a corpus of modern British English (Ferraresi et al., 2008). This would have the advantage of providing very current language data, particularly with regard to computing and the Internet; furthermore, the corpus can be queried using web-based SketchEngine[®] analysis software (Lexcom 2010). However, according to Baroni et al.'s own assessment of the corpus (Baroni et al., 2009, Ferraresi, 2008), certain genres, and in particular, spoken language are more strongly represented in the BNC than they are in ukWaC, and there is a bias, perhaps inevitably, given the nature of the source texts, towards technical and computing language, as well as over-representation of certain genres, such as health and welfare texts, due to the presence of large public information websites. There are clear stylistic differences and different text types represented in the corpus:

...the text types in which politics and economics are predominantly found are different across ukWaC and the BNC. (Ferraresi, 2007:82)

This predominance of internet styles of expression, unease at the difficulties that might be encountered over access to the data in the event of loss of connection to the internet, and practical considerations about the compatibility of the analytical software when working on the MTC, persuaded me to select the BNC as the reference corpus. The issues around analytical software are discussed in 2.1.2.

2.1.1.5 Size, balance and representativeness

Specialised corpora are composed of selected texts, intended to provide a somewhat representative sample of language from a particular genre or specific discourse community. Specialised corpora tend to be relatively small when compared to 'General' or 'Reference' corpora, although the aim should always be to make the corpus as large as possible to provide the maximum amount of data to the analyst:

There is no virtue in being small. Small is not beautiful; it is simply a limitation.
(Sinclair, 2004:189)

Any selection of texts is a sample. Whether or not a sample is 'representative', however depends first of all on the extent to which it is selected from the range of text types in the target population. (Biber, 1993:243)

The constraints on size in specialised corpora should, according to Sinclair (2004:189), be pragmatic rather than the result of a deliberate choice to limit the size of the corpus on the part of the corpus designer; where the available texts are finite, e.g. the works of a particular author, or when the texts come from a specific collection, the corpus will be limited to the material that is available. In other cases, issues of balance and representativeness may limit the number of texts in particular subcorpora. This has been particularly pertinent in the construction of the MTC, where the texts have been selected to be representative of various text types within the maritime discourse. However, the absence of spoken word texts in the MTC means that the corpus cannot be regarded as truly representative of the total discourse. Written language can only ever represent a tiny fraction of the linguistic activity of a discourse community and particularly one where, for much of its history, the majority of the protagonists were at best, semi-literate (Rediker, 1987:158) and therefore unable, or at least unlikely to have expressed themselves in writing. As Sinclair (2005:9) points out, for a corpus to be truly balanced, that is, representative of actual language in use, it would have to be composed of up to 90% spoken language to reflect the relative amount of speech, compared to written language, that most people will encounter. In the case of the MTC, spoken language is not available. Furthermore it has to be acknowledged that the great majority of texts within the MTC are fictional, thus the extent to which they truly represent the maritime discourse is open to question. It might be more accurate to suggest that the majority of texts represent the maritime discourse as presented to the general discourse community by fiction writers with more or less direct experience of maritime language and practices.

Atkins et al. posit the idea of the balanced corpus as:

A corpus so finely tuned that it offers a manageably small scale model of the linguistic material which corpus users wish to study. (Atkins et al., 1992:6)

However, they also point out that such balance 'relies heavily on intuition'. In this study, I have based decisions on what to exclude and include in the corpus as 'maritime texts', on generic criteria of subject matter and context, but, as will be seen in Chapter 4.1.3.1, decisions about what to include and exclude from the corpus are governed as much by questions of availability, as suitability.

The MTC is an opportunistic corpus (McEnery and Hardie, 2011: 11); relevant material has been included because of its availability, so that there is an inevitable imbalance between historical fictional texts, which, being out of copyright, are generally freely available through electronic resources such as Project Gutenberg, and modern non-fiction texts, which are only available if purchased and permission is gained for their use from the publisher; such permissions are rarely forthcoming. There is a great deal of 'maritime' material stored in various archives and collections in libraries and museums, however, much of it is not available in a form suitable for inclusion in a corpus. Handwritten texts and older eighteenth and nineteenth century printed texts, such as journals, broadsheets and newspapers are generally not clear enough to be scanned using currently available Optical Character Recognition software (OCR), so that, given the time and resource constraints of the study, text collection has been limited to material that is available in electronic digital form either from the internet or from publishers, a number of whom have allowed their material to be used. For the MTC, the key text types have been identified and texts selected to reflect those areas, in order to 'represent' the maritime discourse. The text selections are based on what Biber (1993:243) describes as 'situational' or Sinclair (2004:1) calls 'external' factors; that is, they are chosen for their communicative function in the discourse, not for linguistic or 'internal' features:

Corpora should be designed and constructed exclusively on external criteria
(Clear, 1992)

The specifics of how matters of balance and representativeness have been addressed in the MTC is discussed in more detail under Methodology in Chapter 4.1.3.1.

2.1.2 Analytical Tools

The data from the corpus needs to be analysed using specialist software or corpus tools. The data comes in a variety of forms, but the basic information is statistical and describes language in terms of frequencies of occurrences of words and patterns of language.

Before discussing the corpus tools in detail, it is important to define the terms we are using to describe the data.

In corpus linguistics, words within a text or corpus are classified in specific ways; following Hunston (2002:16-18) the basic terms are as follows:

- Token - running words are seen as tokens, thus the MTC contains 8,692,655 tokens.
- Type – although there are 8,692,655 tokens in the corpus, a great many of these, particularly the grammatical words, are repeated a great many times. The number of types, or different words, in the MTC is actually 96,517.
- Lemma and word form - words can have different inflexional forms within a text, for example, plurals and genitives for nouns or tense and number indicators for verbs e.g. man/man's/men, dog/dog's/dogs, sit/sitting/sat. While it might be argued that these are different words, for linguistic description purposes they are considered to be different word forms of a particular lemma. In this study the lemma is denoted by the headword, that is, the uninflected form of the word. Thus men is the plural word form of the lemma MAN* and sitting and sat are present-continuous and past forms of the lemma SIT*. Hunston (2002:18) points out that there is some debate over whether words in different word classes should be treated as separate lemma or word forms of a single lemma. Thus the noun FIGHT* may be regarded as a separate lemma from the verb FIGHT*, with its word forms fighting and fought. Wordsmith Tools is able to lemmatise wordlists and collocation data, however, it cannot differentiate between word classes unless the corpus has been annotated with POS tagging. When using word lists and collocation data it is generally more informative to see all the word forms that occur rather than using lemmatised lists where only the headword is shown for any particular lemma. I have therefore used the lemmatisation function sparingly other than when setting up searches for particular multi-word expressions, using concordancing, where I want to find all the word forms associated with a particular ME. Where I have lemmatised word lists this is made clear in the analysis.

When referring to lemma, rather than a specific word form, I use the convention of capitalising the headword and adding an asterisk to indicate that all word forms of that lemma are included.

- Tagging and annotation – although Sinclair (2004:190-191) contends strongly that tagging is not desirable if one is to have full access to the information that a corpus has to offer, tagging, or the encoding of extra information with the data within the corpus, in the form of part-of-speech (POS) labels, formatting data and metadata about text sources and types, is now very common. In the BNC, the lexis has been POS tagged so that word types and forms can be identified and read by corpus query software such as WordSmith. However, for this study, I have avoided using the extensive tagging encoded in the BNC, other than the indexing data that identifies the source texts that concordance lines come from. The MTC is not annotated other than indexing of the texts to provide identification information.

2.1.3 Analytical Output

The main output from corpus tools comes in the forms of word lists and concordance lines. WordSmith Tools© 5.0 (Scott 2010) has been used to produce a word list and 'keyword' list for the MTC. The keyword lists are then used to generate concordance lines around the node (2.1.3.2 below)

2.1.3.1 Keyword Lists, Keywords and Key Keywords:

These are produced by making two word lists, one from the specialist corpus or target texts and one from the reference corpus and comparing the frequencies of the words in each list. Keywords are those words that occur significantly more often within the target corpora/texts and are thus characteristic of the texts. The analyst must then assess the actual significance and relevance of these words within the discourse. In this study we are looking for the keywords that characterise maritime texts⁵.

In addition, Wordsmith Tools allows for the computation of key keywords; batches of keywords can be produced for each text file, or specified files within the corpus, or a particular subcorpus; these are then built into a database of keywords that can be analysed for frequency of occurrence in each text to produce key keywords. Thus, for example, in the MTC Song Subcorpus, it is possible to differentiate between those words that are very high frequency items because they occur in the refrains of just one or two songs, and those items that occur frequently across a large number of songs and which are therefore more significant as generic features of maritime songs as a whole.

2.1.3.2 Concordance lines

A concordancer such as Wordsmith provides data that the analyst can use to classify and analyse typical and atypical patterns of usage for specific words or groups of words. Concordance lines show keywords in context, so that patterns of usage can be analysed. In a Keywords in Context (KWIC) format, they are single lines of text, normally about 11 words in length, extracted from a corpus, which contain the target (key)word or node in the middle of the line and usually five or six words either side of it, to provide context and therefore reveal something of the way in which the word has been used in that line, as in Figure 2, below, which shows a random selection of ten lines from the BNC for the node word NAUTICAL.

⁵ Keywords can be either positive or negative; texts may be characterised by words that appear less frequently than might be expected as well as by those words that appear more often. In this study, however, we are only concerned with positive keywords.

The BNC has 138 instances of NAUTICAL. In Figure 2, each concordance line comes from a different text, as indicated by the 'File' column on the right hand side of the window, and contains the node word NAUTICAL (in blue) in context. Generally, in this study, when referring to words, other than the node, in a concordance line, they are numbered from the node outwards as Left (L) 1-5 and, Right (R) 1-5, so, in line 2, one would refer to 'deposits' as being in L3 position.

2.1.3.3 Collocates:

In Figure 2 (above), MILES appears with the node, NAUTICAL, four times in these 11 concordance lines, thus MILES appears to be a collocate of NAUTICAL. Corpus analysis software, such as WordSmith Tools, can find and list all the collocates for any word in the corpus and order them according to a variety of measures of statistical relevance and probability. In this study, the measure chosen is a mutual information score (MI3), which measures the strength of the collocational relationship between the node and the collocate, that is, how likely it is that the collocate will occur within a given distance of the node word.

In the BNC, WordSmith Tools lists 70 statistically significant collocates for NAUTICAL⁶. The top ten collocates are shown below (Table 1) sorted by MI3 to show the strongest collocates first. The higher the MI3 score is, the stronger the collocation can be said to be, and the more likely it is that the two words will appear together. A score close to 0 indicates that the words' co-occurrence is likely to be a result of chance rather than any established pattern of usage (McEnery et al. 2006:56).

Table 1 shows that, in the BNC, MILES collocates with NAUTICAL 33 times in 21 texts. The MI3 score is 21.69, which is the highest score for any of the collocates found in the BNC. This collocation occurs only once to the left of the node and 32 times to the right and always in position R1, producing the phrase Nautical miles. Further patterning is revealed by looking again at the concordance lines for NAUTICAL (Figure 3, below):

In Figure 3, sorting the concordances by L1 reveals a strong patterning of numerals preceding the phrase nautical miles.

Collocation is one of the key types of data that corpora can reveal. Sinclair describes collocation by saying 'the choice of one word conditions the next' (2004:19), thus it is through collocation that we derive the meaning of words and their behaviour. More precisely, in terms of corpus studies, '...collocation is the statistical tendency for words to co-occur' (Hunston, 2002:12). The term 'collocation' was first coined by John Firth (1957:194) some seven years before the first computerised corpus was built (Francis and Kucera, 1979)⁷. This distinguishes between the semantic notion of the meaning of words and the establishment of a word's meaning by examining the 'company it keeps' (Hunston, 2002:11). This idea was further developed by Halliday (1966:152), who introduced the idea of measuring collocational probability, and then by Sinclair during the 1960s and 70s, who developed the computational approach to collocation through the development of computerised corpora (Krishnamurthy, 2004). Collocation is concerned with repeated, statistically significant patterns, where words occur together more often than chance alone might dictate. The statistical relationships are calculated on measures of frequency and probability, and various calculations can be used, depending on the type of relationships being explored (See 4.4 for a more detailed explanation).

⁷The Brown Corpus, developed at Brown University, Rhode Island, became available in 1964

A fixed phrase, such as the ME TAKEN ABACK, (See 0 for full analysis) illustrates the importance of understanding collocational relationships. ABACK, occurs with TAKEN 287 times out of a total of 304 occurrences of ABACK in the BNC, and is at the top of a list of 85 collocates (just 27 of which are lexical or content words; the remainder being grammatical or function words such as BE*, BY, THE and pronouns. Table 2 shows the top ten collocates for ABACK, of which just four items are lexical words, TAKEN, SOMEWHAT, SLIGHTLY and LOOKED.

Table 2: BNC : ABACK (Top 10 collocates by MI3 Score)

Using Wordsmith Tools, we can find various collocational patterns, or 'clusters' (Scott, 2011) (Table 3, below)⁸, which illustrate the usage patterns found in the corpus.

⁸ See 2.2.3 for a detailed discussion of clusters and multi-word units.

Table 3: BNC: TAKEN ABACK Collocational Clusters

8	TAKEN ABACK HE	5
9	TAKEN ABACK TO	8

In the BNC, the expression TAKE* ABACK is always used metaphorically and the patterns of use reflect this, especially in the use of modifiers such as A LITTLE, SLIGHTLY and SOMEWHAT, none of which are applied in the technical use of the term. In the MTC, ABACK is used both literally and metaphorically, but the metaphorical use is comparatively rare and the top 10 collocates (Table 4, below) are mainly technical terms along with one proper noun, BURNHAM, which is the name of a ship. The verb TAKE appears at number 51 in the lemmatised collocation list.

Table 4: MTC: ABACK (Top 10 Collocates by MI3)

10	LAY	14.904	7	18

Certain words are collocationally more restricted in one direction than the other. Looking for instance at the collocations for TAKEN in the BNC, while ABACK has a very limited set of just five lexical collocates, TAKEN has a list of 5,356 words that the MI3 measurement scores as statistically significant collocates and ABACK appears in seventeenth position, behind other lexical collocates such as ACCOUNT and PLACE, demonstrating that while ABACK is very restricted in its choice of collocates, TAKEN is far less limited in its collocational partners.

2.1.3.4 Colligation

As well as the collocational relationships revealed by concordances, which are generally concerned with lexical items, we can also study the colligational relationships of words, that is the grammatical structures that are characteristic of particular expressions:

Colligation is the relation between a pair of grammatical categories or, in a slightly wider sense, a pairing of lexis and grammar. (Stubbs, 2001: 65)

Thus we can describe the characteristic construction of the ME TAKEN ABACK in colligational terms, looking at the clusters in Table 3, above, as frequently occurring as MODIFIER+VERB (Passive)+ADVERB + PREPOSITION as in:

- A little taken aback by
- Slightly taken aback by
- Somewhat taken aback by/to/when

While collocation is chiefly concerned with the lexical relationships between words, colligation is concerned with the grammatical relationships revealed by concordance patterns. The development of corpus linguistics has significantly blurred traditional boundaries between lexicology and grammar (Hunston and Francis, 2000, Sinclair, 1996, 2004), so that we tend to view words as components of units of meaning (Sinclair 1996) that include both collocational and colligational elements. In this study, emphasis of the analysis is lexical, with the focus very much on the collocational ties between words, thus the measure chosen for the statistical ordering of collocates, MI3, favours lexical or content words, with grammatical words, which tend to be the most frequent items, being demoted in importance in the collocate lists.

2.1.3.5 Semantic Preference and Semantic Prosody

Between them, collocation and colligation can give us a great deal of information, not just about the meaning of specific lexis, but also about semantic preference (Partington, 2004:131), which is ‘the relation, not between individual words, but between a lemma or word form and a set of semantically related words’ (Stubbs 2001:65), and semantic prosody (Louw, 1993) or, as Stubbs prefers to call it, discourse prosody of words (2001:65), that is ‘the collocational meaning that is hidden between words’ (McEnery et al., 2006:148), so that an expression such as KEEP/STAY AFLOAT (See 5.6.3) can be seen in the BNC, to have a semantic prosody of survival in the face of risk and struggle, and a semantic preference of business/economic language.

2.2 Defining Maritime

The first issue to be addressed here is what criteria qualify a text as ‘maritime’ and what is meant in this context by ‘maritime’? According to the OED (updated Dec 2000):

maritime, adj. and n.

1. Of (a member of) a fighting force: intended for service at sea.
1550—1994

2. a. Connected, associated, or dealing with shipping, naval matters, navigation, seaborne trade, etc.
1588—1994

b. Characteristic of a seaman; sailor-like.
Generally used to suggest the traditional stereotype of a hardened or experienced sailor.
1743—1960

a. Of a place: bordering the sea. Of a person: living near or by the sea.

This compares with the OED entry (updated June 2003) for ‘nautical’ nautical, adj. and n

Of, relating to, or characteristic of sailing, sailors, or the sea; naval, marine, maritime, seafaring.
1552—1998

These two definitions suggest that the words are virtually synonymous, although the word ‘characteristic’ suggests that nautical is perhaps a more qualitative expression than maritime.

Using the BNC, we can get a better picture of the use of these two words. There are 569 occurrences of MARITIME in the corpus, compared with just 138 for NAUTICAL and, as we have already discussed in 2.1.3.2, above, there are just 70 collocates for NAUTICAL, whereas the collocates list for MARITIME runs to 157 words. These statistics alone suggest that MARITIME is a more versatile adjective than NAUTICAL and a comparison of the top 40 collocates for the two words bears this out (Table 5, below⁹). Generally it seems that collocates for NAUTICAL are more specific in nature; thus we have miles, almanac, charts, range and even the name of a pop band called ‘Nautical William’:

Nautical William are a band for the Nineties steeped in three decades of pop star culture (BNC/CGC)

⁹ Among the top collocates for MARITIME are the words Rubra and Maritima, which both come from a single scientific text about grass varieties. Such frequent collocations within a single text can give misleading results. Similarly names of characters in novels or articles can achieve unmerited (from a lexicological point of view) prominence in collocate lists.

MARITIME collocates with the names of organisations, companies and museums, or conventions, legislation and practices and broad concepts such as heritage and history:

If the Minister is genuinely concerned about maritime safety, he must do something about the massive proposed cuts in the coastguard service.

2.2.1 Maritime Texts

In the light of the discussion above, for the purposes of this study, the term 'maritime' will be used as a general descriptor of the texts, i.e. writings connected to the sea, included in the MTC. The term is deliberately non-specific so that a range of text-types and genres can be included within the corpus. To qualify as maritime, a text must have a theme that has the sea at its core as either protagonist or setting. Thus the shanties and sea songs in the corpus may not always have the sea as their subject, indeed many are more concerned with the sailors' other main preoccupations of drink and women (Doerflinger, 1990), but they are texts 'owned' by the discourse community of sailors (Hugill, 1994) and shaped by their function as work-songs on ships.

Fictional works cannot be claimed to be true representations of the sailor's discourse as they are mediated through the author's requirements to write a good story and to make the representations of sailors' speech both accessible and acceptable to a wide readership. However, these texts, particularly those of naval men and sailors such as Smollett, Marryat, Melville or Conrad are the nearest we are likely to get to patterns of speech and usage of their times and, moreover, it could be argued that it is these texts that have been most influential in promoting our current concepts of a maritime discourse which, with the passing of the age of sailing ships, has all but disappeared.

I have labelled the language here as an occupational register because the language is that of a discourse community engaged or associated with the work of seamen and those working with them. I accept however that the fictional material that makes up the greater proportion of the MTC cannot be claimed to be authentic maritime language, in the sense of having been generated from actual recorded interchanges between sailors at sea, either spoken or written. My argument is rather that these texts represent at least an approximation of the language used by working sailors; that language is specialised because of the nature of the occupations of the men and women using it. It uses many technical and specialised terms that are not found on land, except when used in the form of MEs, which can be regarded as borrowings or transfers. It is this process of transfer and metaphorisation that is at the heart of the study.

We need here to be clear as to what is meant by the term 'text'. Halliday maintains that text is:

language that is functional. [...] Language that is doing some job in some context, as opposed to isolated words or sentences [...]. So any instance of living language that is playing some part in a context of situation, we shall call it a text. It may be either spoken or written, or indeed in any other medium of expression that we like to think of. (Halliday and Hasan, 1985:10)

This definition, with its focus on the functionality of text, works particularly well within this study, where we are looking at a potential channel of linguistic change, that is, that the use of particular words or fixed expressions within a particular discourse community (Swales, 1990:21) i.e. the technical world of seafarers, has been transferred to the general speech community of English speakers, which is at some considerable remove, socially, temporally and geographically from the original discourse community that owned the language. Teubert (2007:124) makes the point strongly that it is only through texts that have contributed to a discourse that we can understand meaning and that discourse only has meaning within the discourse community:

The reality out there becomes accessible only through the mediation of the discourse; it remains meaningless unless we, the members of the discourse community, succeed in reconstructing it in the discourse. (2007:124)

The MTC is composed of written texts spanning some 300 years; this diachronic aspect of the texts led to the decision to avoid spoken texts per se. We can only judge contributions to the discourse evidenced in the written record (Teubert, 2005: Thesis 2). When dealing with diachronic data, we have no access to the spoken word other than as mediated through transcription and reported conversation.

Within the MTC, only full texts have been included, based on the principle stated by Stubbs that 'The unit of study must be whole texts' (1996:32), as this ensures that all available language types, representative of a particular genre are represented. As Sinclair (1991:19) points out, language is not uniform throughout a text, and specific features may be more or less prevalent, depending on where in the text one looks; sampled texts may miss specific features from the beginning or ends of texts that are not present elsewhere. It is acknowledged that a valid argument might be made for including maritime extracts taken from non-maritime texts such as, for example, the storm scene from Shakespeare's Tempest, containing samples of Elizabethan sailor's language, or at least, Shakespeare's version of it, or the opening of Bram Stoker's Dracula, with its vivid descriptions of a doomed ship's voyage. Such extracts, however, are rarely completely isolated within the 'host' text and may be difficult to define within the context of the wider narrative of the work. While Shakespeare's writing has been described as accurate and authentic (Mentz, 2009), it is not always evident that such writing can be regarded as truly 'maritime'. On balance, the arguments of Atkins et al. for the prototypical text as:

...discursive and typically at least several pages long;
 ...integral;
 ...the conscious product of a unified authorial effort;
 ...stylistically homogeneous. (1992:2)

hold up well for the MTC, although certain texts, such as newspapers, fit less easily into this model, as will be seen in the discussion regarding the constitution of the MTC subcorpora (4.1.2.1). The classification of these texts as 'maritime' is often difficult, particularly with regard to decisions about the limitations of the text. Should a newspaper be regarded as an homogenous text or as a text colony (Hoey in Coulthard et al., 1993, Hoey, 2001)? Should individual articles be selected or entire newspapers? Papers from the great maritime ports such as Bristol, Chatham, Liverpool, Plymouth and Portsmouth will contain numerous maritime features including advertisements, shipping lists, cargo manifests; it could be argued that the entire publication should be treated as a maritime text. A more detailed discussion of text types and their classification within the MTC will take place in Chapter 4, where the planning and construction processes involved in the building of the MTC are described.

2.2.2 Maritime Expressions

At its simplest level, an ME might be regarded as a specialised word or fixed phrase (a) originating within the maritime sphere of endeavour or (b) that has been adopted by the maritime discourse community so that it takes on a meaning far removed from its use outside of that community. Thus, in the first category we have expressions such as ABACK

(ADJ) or MASTHEAD (N), which were both originally purely technical expressions used by seamen, with no land-based equivalent, and in the second category, expressions such as CAT'S PAW (N) or NETTLE (V), which clearly have their origins on land but whose maritime usages are very different from their counterparts on shore.

a) Pure maritime

ABACK: The situation of a ship's sails when the wind bears against their front surfaces. They are laid aback, when this is purposely affected to deaden her way by rounding in the weather-braces; and taken aback, when brought to by an unexpected change of wind, or by inattention in the helmsman.

(Smyth, 1867:11)

b) Adapted maritime

CAT'S PAW: A light air perceived at a distance in a calm, by the impressions made on the surface of the sea, which it sweeps very gently, and then passes away, being equally partial and transitory. CAT'S-PAW is also a name given to a particular twisting hitch, made in the bight of a rope, so as to induce two small bights, in order to hook a tackle on them both. Also, good-looking seamen employed to entice volunteers. (Smyth, 1867:172)

NETTLES: Small line used for seizings, and for hammock-clues. – to nettle, is to provoke. (Smyth, 1867:496)

NETTLED: At 10 AM Thomson's arms was lashed; the Ship's Company formed a Lane all around the Waist of the Ship, every man being provided with a Nettle. (Thomas, 1798:133)

When does a word or a string of words become a maritime expression as opposed to, in Sinclair's (2004:29) terms, an 'open choice' word or phrase? The first criteria is repetition:

...a language pattern – however defined – has to occur a minimum of twice. This is a primitive test of significance in itself, in that the exact recurrence of an event is rather unlikely to be an accident. (Sinclair, 2004:28)

From the examples cited above, it would appear that an ME can be formed from a single lexeme, but should we label individual words as 'expressions'? Since the advent of computerised corpus linguistics this issue has taken on considerable importance, as the identification of units of meaning (Sinclair, 1996:81) involves far more than the (relatively) simple process of identifying words on the page as groupings of letters surrounded by white space (Sinclair, 1996, 2004:132). Sinclair (2004:133) points out the difficulties computers have with lemmatisation, because it is structural form rather than orthographic form that equates to meaning and, more importantly from our point of view, '...correlations of meanings and word class break down when the words form part of some idiomatic or technical term'. Sinclair points to compounds and phrasal verbs:

... idioms, fixed phrases, variable phrases, clichés, proverbs, and many technical terms and much jargon, as examples of recognised patterns where the independence of the word is compromised in some way. (2004:18) as further evidence of language consisting of 'compound lexical items', and regards instances of an individual lemma representing a single meaning as being extremely rare.

MEs fit well within Sinclair's list and can safely be classified as multi-word units of meaning. Within this study, a single lemma is not regarded as an ME in its own right, but only as a component of a compound lexical item.

To demonstrate this point, look at the potential ME, BROADSIDE. To be classified as an ME, in the terms of this study, it will need to be unequivocally shown to have had, at some time, a primarily maritime usage. The OED (original ed. 1888) provides the following definition:

broadside, n.
 Etymology: Formerly two words: broad adj. + side n.
 1.
 a. Naut. 'The whole of that side of a ship above the water which is situate between the bow and the quarter' (Smyth Sailor's Word-bk.).
 1591—1862
 b. broadside to (or and) broadside : with the side of one ship to that of another; transf. side by side, close to each other.
 1696—1769
 c. broadside on, broadside to, (a broadside obs.): with the side of the vessel turned fully to the object considered; transversely, across the length.
 1716—1840
 d. Of the side of something other than a ship.
 1632—1884
 2. 'The whole array, or the simultaneous discharge, of the artillery on one side of a ship of war' (Smyth Sailor's Word-bk.).
 1589—1834
 3. A sheet of paper printed on one side only, forming one large page; = broadsheet n.
 1691—1861

This set of definitions shows BROADSIDE as a maritime expression in origin, but also details the link between the original broadside sheet of paper, from which the expression 'broadside ballad' comes (Hopkin et al., 2009), and the expression 'broadsheet newspaper'.

In order to establish BROADSIDE's credentials as an ME in this study's terms, it needs to be placed within its context by searching for its collocates, which will provide the evidence for classifying it as an ME, as well as providing information about its uses in modern English.

The basic unit for encoding and decoding may therefore be the group, set, phrase or collocation, rather than the orthographic word. This is relevant to FEIs [Fixed expressions and idioms], as it may shed light on how they are processed and how they fossilize, as well as their function within discourse.

Figure 5, shows the 20 most significant collocates of BROADSIDE* as found in the MTC and the BNC¹⁰, ordered according to their MI3 scores. BROADSIDE* occurs 879 times in the MTC (8.8 million tokens) or 20.5 words per million (wpm) and just 110 times in the BNC (100 million tokens) or 0.14 wpm, which indicates very strongly the maritime nature of the word. However it is the collocations found in the two corpora that reveal the word's status as an ME.

Looking at the main collocates, we find fire and exchange featuring prominently in the MTC, while fire also appears as the highest collocate in the BNC, apart from Bucks, which turns out to be part of the name of a column, 'Buck's Broadside', in a magazine about rugby football, which is cited in three separate sports news reports. The expression EXCHANGE* + BROADSIDES occurs 36 times in the MTC but does not occur at all in the BNC, making it a pure ME, while FIRE* + BROADSIDE occurs 121 times in the MTC and just nine times in the BNC, where we also find LAUNCHED + BROADSIDE four times, which doesn't occur at all in the MTC.

¹⁰ The asterisk * is used to indicate the various lemma forms, ie BROADSIDE/ BROADSIDES; EXCHANGE/ED/ING

Figures 6 and 7, below, show concordance lines for FIRE + BROADSIDE from the MTC and the BNC that demonstrate the shift from literal, maritime usage to modern metaphorical usage in the BNC:

In Figure 7, only line 4 is used literally in a maritime context. There are two lines (8 & 9) from the same text (BNC/AR8), where the phrase is used as a simile in an account of SAS raids by jeeps on an airfield. The other lines come from news items about politics (lines 1,2,3,7), sport (lines 5,6) and business (line10). Eight of these ten lines come from newspapers and two (8 & 9) from non-fiction books.

The shift is also exemplified in Figure 8 below, where the ME LAUNCHED + BROADSIDE is shown. Here the expression has become fixed in a form that is not found at all in the MTC, so it is possible that this use of the term has come from the printing tradition rather than the maritime discourse.

However, the fact that LAUNCH is itself a maritime word (OED, Original ed. 1902), plus the presence of the collocate HEAVY (line 2), which appears 17 times with BROADSIDE in the MTC, would suggest strongly that this is an ME, as Figure 9 bears out:

Thus, rather than classifying the single lemma BROADSIDE as an ME in its own right, we have now described a number of distinct, but related MEs: FIRE + BROADSIDE; EXCHANGE + BROADSIDE, LAUNCH + BROADSIDE and HEAVY + BROADSIDE, further investigation, would no doubt reveal additional MEs.

To summarise, in this study, MEs are repeated clusters of words forming extended units of meaning¹¹ that were originally coined or adapted for use by the maritime discourse community. Some of these expressions have subsequently been adopted by the wider English speaking speech community and it is these that this study is particularly interested in. In that process of adoption, these expressions show a tendency to become more fixed in form and more figurative in meaning.

¹¹ A more detailed discussion of multi-word expressions follows in 2.2.3, below

2.2.3 Multi-Word Expressions

In this study we are specifically examining a range of idiomatic and technical expressions, which, according to Sinclair have tended to be marginalised as oddities by lexicographers and grammarians over the years (1996:75). The term ‘clusters’ or ‘lexical bundles’ covers a range of phrases and part-phrases often so common and mundane that, until the advent of computer corpus analysis, they had been almost completely ignored by linguistic research, hiding, as it were, in plain sight:

Lexical bundles have three major characteristics that distinguish them from other kinds of formulaic expressions. First, lexical bundles are by definition extremely common. Second, most lexical bundles are not idiomatic in meaning and not perceptually salient... And finally, lexical bundles usually do not represent a complete structural unit. (Biber and Barbieri, 2006: 269-10)

However, MEs are more formally structured than Biber’s (2006) ‘lexical bundles’; MEs tend to be complete structural units, often idiomatic and figurative in nature, falling into Moon’s (1998) ‘Fixed Expressions and Idioms’ (FEI) category.

Defining multi-word units of meaning has become a major preoccupation for corpus linguists:

...despite the general consensus on the importance of multi-word units, there is surprisingly little agreement on their defining characteristics, the methodologies to identify them, or even what to call them; and, as a result, there is little agreement across studies on the specific set of multi-word units worthy of description. (Biber et al., 2004:372)

Biber describes repeated strings of words as multi-word units (MWU), multi-word sequences or ‘lexical bundles’ (2004:372), which are defined as ‘recurrent expressions, regardless of their idiomaticity, and regardless of their structural status’ (Biber and Conrad, 1999, Biber et al., 2004, Biber, 2009), while Scott uses ‘clusters’ for ‘any multi-word combination which occurs within frequency thresholds set by the researcher’ (Scott and Tribble, 2006: ix). All these definitions are about contiguous strings of words rather than semantics or phraseology.

As we have seen in the discussion regarding the ME FIRE + BROADSIDE (2.2.2:p51, above) expressions are not always, or even usually, composed of contiguous strings of words. Where non-contiguous MWUs are concerned, a number of labels have been used. Moon (1998:79) talks of ‘phrasal lexemes’, meaning:

...the whole range of fixed and semi-fixed complex items which dictionaries in the Anglo-American tradition classify and treat as ‘phrases’ or ‘idioms’.

While Mel'čuk (1998:23), in discussing the nature of collocations, i.e. words that 'prefer the company of another item rather than its synonyms', talks of 'set phrases or phrasemes' and points out that they:

cannot be studied in any one for the traditional divisions of linguistics (thus not semantics nor in syntax), precisely because of their non-compositional, 'irregular' semantic and syntactic nature. (1998: Footnote 2 p:24)

Cowie (1998), adds the description 'prefabricated units or 'prefabs' to a list which also includes 'phraseological units' (Ginzburg et al 1979; Gläzer 1986), and 'word combinations', while more recently Conklin and Schmitt (2008:72), following Wray and Perkins (2000) and Wray (2002), use the phrase 'formulaic sequences', also adopted by Biber (2009:286) as 'formulaic multi-word sequences'.

All of these definitions try to pin down the variable nature of repeated strings of words that have very specific applications in particular contexts. The difficulty is created because, as we can see with the ME TAKEN ABACK (Figure 10), the actual form of many, if not most, 'fixed' expressions is actually far from fixed, so that talking of 'fixed expressions' and 'contiguous strings' can be misleading. These distinctions are only important in this study because finding MEs within the corpora involves being able to recognise the components that make up the expression.

These lines from the MTC shows that, even with an apparently structurally simple ME like TAKEN ABACK, such phrases are often more fluid than the term 'fixed expression' implies.

The methodology for recognising and describing specific expressions in a corpus, and particularly in the MTC, will be described in Chapter 4.

2.3 Summary

The chapter starts with an overview of the terms and concepts behind corpus linguistics, and describes the differences between corpus driven and corpus based studies (2.1.1.2). In 2.1.1.3, the role of specialised corpora in the study of specialised discourses is examined. This leads into a discussion of why the BNC was chosen as the reference corpus for this study (2.1.1.4) and questions of size, balance and representativeness (2.1.1.5). This is followed in 2.1.2 by an examination of the corpus tools used to analyse the data and the outputs from the corpus. In 2.1.3, that output is described in terms of keyword lists, concordances, collocation and colligation and the concepts of semantic prosody and semantic preference.

In 2.2, I discuss more topic specific issues, including definitions of 'Maritime' and 'Nautical' and the maritime texts and MEs that lie at the heart of this study. This then leads into a discussion of research done into fixed phrases and how MEs fit into these descriptions.

In Chapter 3, I look at MEs and metaphor and at current theories about metaphorical language and conceptual metaphors.

3 MEs and Metaphor

The metaphorical nature of MEs is central to the focus of this study. In this section, I discuss concepts of metaphoricity and the processes of metaphorisation, with specific reference to MEs as identified in the MTC. I illustrate the discussion through the use of a number of MEs that seem to me to be representative of the range of metaphorical types found in the data and which effectively demonstrate the cline of metaphoricity found. Finally, I describe the model used in the analysis in Chapter 5 to evaluate and describe the set of MEs identified in the corpus.

Section 3.1 discusses the differences between linguistic and cognitive approaches to metaphor theory and lists a number of specifically Maritime Conceptual Metaphors (MCM) that the data reveals.

In 3.2, definitions and descriptions of metaphor are discussed with particular reference to the work of leading metaphor theorists including Deignan, Goatly, Hanks and Lakoff and Johnson. The key descriptive terms for the elements of metaphors that have been adopted for my own model are then defined and illustrated.

3.2.1 provides an explanation of the concept of metaphoricity and the different types of metaphor found in the data, and discusses the factors that shape metaphoricity:

- 3.2.1.1: Concepts of Activity, including definitions of active, inactive and dead metaphors
- 3.2.1.2: Salient cognitive (or perceptual) features
- 3.2.1.3: Resonance
- 3.2.1.4: Transparency and opacity
- 3.2.1.5: Semantic Class

In 3.3, I discuss the specific metaphorical model adopted for use in this study, which draws on the theoretical notions described in the previous section. The model is illustrated through the detailed analysis of the metaphorical use of the MEs, ANCHOR and TAKE ABACK. The key features of metaphorisation are then summarised and tools for the analysis of metaphoricity are illustrated. The model introduces a cline of metaphoricity resulting in the following categorisation of expressions and metaphors found in the MTC data:

Non-ME, Technical/Literal ME, Transfer, Innovative Metaphor, Active Conventionalised Metaphor, Dormant Conventionalised Metaphor, Idiomatic Expression and Resonator.

Also introduced is the idea of 'Key Meaning' as a method for establishing whether expressions are being transferred or extended as they move from the maritime into other discourses, and the salient features that are exploited in specific metaphorical realisations.

3.1 Conceptual and Linguistic Metaphors

Two particular approaches to metaphor are considered here, one being primarily cognitive and the other linguistic. The cognitive approach is exemplified by the work of Lakoff and Johnson (2003), Kovecses (2002), and others, generally referred to as Conceptual Metaphor Theory (CMT), and is concerned with metaphor as a cognitive, conceptual phenomenon. According to Lakoff and Johnson (2003:5) 'The essence of metaphor is understanding and experiencing one kind of thing in terms of another'. Lakoff and Johnson proposed the idea of the Conceptual Metaphor as being fundamental to the way the world is perceived and understood. They regard the function of metaphor as being to enable us to understand concepts (usually abstract) in terms of a language community's everyday concrete cognitive experiences of real world phenomena. Conceptual metaphors, also described by Goatly (2011:42ff) as root analogies, are differentiated from Linguistic Metaphors, which are the spoken or written expressions of Conceptual Mappings. Lakoff And Johnson (2003) use the term 'conceptual mapping' to suggest that abstract ideas rely on metaphorical images, such as UNDERSTANDING IS SEEING or AN ARGUMENT IS WAR / A JOURNEY / BUILDING / CONTAINER. These conceptual metaphors then shape the language used to encapsulate the ideas.

One implication [of Lakoff and Johnson's work] is that the different senses of a polysemous word are not arbitrary historical developments, but can be traced to an underlying conceptual metaphor. (Deignan and Potter, 2003:1231)

Most modern works on metaphor are to varying degrees influenced by Lakoff and Johnson's work.

While Lakoff and Johnson's main concern is with the overarching conceptual metaphors that, they suggest, spring from common human experiences (Lakoff, 1994, 2003), they also stress the 'cultural relativity, at least at more specific levels, of conceptual metaphors and the ways they are lexically instantiated' (Goatly, 2011:43), thus many of the maritime metaphors being studied here are culturally refined versions of overarching conceptual metaphors, where the historical relationship of the British people to the sea is reflected in the particular metaphors they choose to use:

Ship metaphors:

THE MIND IS A SHIP

A PERSON IS A SHIP

THE BODY IS A SHIP

THE WORLD IS A SHIP

THE NATION/ STATE IS A SHIP

AN ORGANISATION IS A SHIP

A PROJECT/ENTERPRISE IS A SHIP

Journey metaphors

LIFE IS A (BOAT) JOURNEY / SEA VOYAGE

A PROJECT/ ENTERPRISE IS A SEA VOYAGE

Cargo Metaphors

RESPONSIBILITY IS CARGO

Sea metaphors

POLITICS IS A SEA

THE ECONOMY IS A SEA

EMOTION IS A SEA

Weather Metaphors

EMOTIONS ARE ATMOSPHERIC CONDITIONS / WEATHER AT SEA

THE ECONOMY IS WEATHER/CLIMATE AT SEA

These MCMs may help to explain the continuing currency of MEs in modern English, despite Britain's diminishing reliance on the sea for trade, economic power and political status. Each of the figurative MEs in the study is considered in relation to these conceptual metaphors and, where appropriate, mapped accordingly.

3.2 Metaphors and Metaphorisation

Researchers in the field of metaphor studies have adopted different terms to describe the features of metaphor and the processes of metaphorisation, it is therefore important to establish the terminology being used here.

As noted above, Lakoff and Johnson (2003) provide a simplified definition of metaphor as 'understanding one thing in terms of another'. By contrast, Goatly (2011:109) gives this definition

'A metaphor occurs when a unit of discourse is used to refer to an object, concept, process, quality, relationship or world to which it does not conventionally refer, or colligates with a unit with which it does not conventionally colligate; and when this unconventional act of reference or colligation is understood on the basis of similarity or analogy involving at least two of the following: the unit's conventional referent; the unit's actual unconventional referent; the actual referent(s) of the unit's actual colligates; the conventional referent of the unit's conventional colligates.

This definition introduces the idea of conventional and unconventional reference, and the idea of similarity or analogy as the link between two apparently separate entities. It also highlights the fact that metaphoricity, and indeed meaning are derived not merely from collocational behaviour of words, but also from colligational ties, that is the grammatical relationships between words.

Hanks describes lexical items in terms of 'meaning potential' (2004:247), a term adapted from Halliday (1971), where meaning is established, within 'syntagmatic patterns' or context, rather than by any inherent, absolute 'literal sense' or core meaning:

The theoretical position is that there are no literal meanings, only varying degrees of probability.

This is reiterated by Teubert, whose view is that that meaning is negotiated between discourse members (2007:83ff) in a process that commences during the language learning stage, when 'gross differences' in usage are discounted by social pressures within the speech community, so that agreed patterns of usage and meaning are established among members of that community.

In Goatly's definition, cited above, 'Conventional referents' are what might be regarded as the 'norms' (Hanks, 2006:19), 'core' (Deignan 2005:34) or literal meanings of words or phrases, while 'Unconventional referents' are figurative 'exploitations' and secondary meanings. There is however a difficulty with Goatly's definition, which is that the use of the terms 'conventional' is also used by Deignan, Hanks and others to categorise a specific class of metaphor; conventionalised metaphors are those that have become established and accepted in the lexicon as normalised secondary meanings, but are recognised as having developed from an original non-metaphorical use. In this work, I therefore reserve the use of 'conventionalised' for this category of metaphor.

Deignan uses the following definition of metaphor

A metaphor is a word or expression that is used to talk about an entity or quality other than that referred to by its core, or most basic meaning. This non-core use expresses a perceived relationship with the core meaning of the word, and in many cases between two semantic fields. (Deignan, 2005:34)

This adds a further nuance to the meaning of metaphor in that Deignan refers to changes in semantic field as being an important indicator of metaphoricity. Thus, for example, ANCHOR is used to express a 'perceived relationship' between the semantic fields of maritime security and spiritual security.

Hanks (2006:26) defines metaphor as: 'A resonant, semantic relationship between a primary subject and a secondary subject'. This definition requires that there is 'resonance' between the source and target; that is, that the user/ receiver of the expression is able to recognise and exploit both primary and secondary meanings of the expression.

In their simplest form, metaphors can be described as having, either explicitly or implicitly, three basic components:

- a. The primary sense, i.e. the conventional 'literal' or 'core' reference: e.g. ANCHOR = Heavy, specifically shaped object used for attaching a ship to the sea/riverbed to stop it moving. This has been variously labelled as the 'source' (Moon, 1998; Lakoff and Johnson, 2003; Deignan, 2005; Hanks, 2006) or the 'vehicle' (Goatly, 2011)
- b. The secondary sense, i.e. the figurative meaning of the term: e.g. ANCHOR = Person employed to represent a news programme on television or radio. This is referred to as the 'target' by Moon, Lakoff and Johnson, Deignan and Hanks, who also uses the term 'secondary meaning' (2006:18), and as the 'topic' by Goatly.
- c. The perceived shared points of comparison or analogy which make 'b' work as a metaphor for 'a'; referred to by Lakoff and Johnson and Deignan as 'mapping', by Hanks as 'salient cognitive (or perceptual) features' (2006:20) and by Goatly as 'grounds'.

In this study, primary sense (a) is termed the 'source', which embodies both the idea of 'original, literal meaning' and original domain and semantic field of a particular word, phrase or expression. The source meaning of MEs is established through data from the highly specialised discourse represented in the MTC, which is then compared with data from the general discourse reference corpus, the BNC, to show any differences in usage and, in particular, any shift from 'literal' technical use in the maritime discourse to more figurative or idiomatic use in the modern general discourse. This is then compared with definitions from the OED to confirm etymology and earliest uses.

For the secondary sense (b), I have adopted Hanks', Deignan's and Lakoff and Johnson's term 'Target', which embodies the idea of a meaning that is deliberately aimed for or intended by the user (as opposed to accidentally evoked interpretations) that exploits salient features of the source. This is confirmed through corpus data and the use of current Advanced Learner Dictionaries (ALD) such as the Collins Cobuild Advanced Dictionary (Collins Cobuild, 2008) and on-line dictionaries including Macmillan Online (2013) (MMD) and the Oxford Dictionary Pro (2013) (ODP)

For (c), I use Hank's label of 'salient features' for those relevant shared points of comparison that can be perceived between the source and the target term, and I use 'mapping' to describe broader relationships between specific linguistic metaphors and the conceptual metaphors they relate to.

For the ANCHOR / NEWS ANCHOR metaphor, cited above, features of an anchor might be: fixedness, trustworthiness, reliability, safety, weight, immovability, connection to a ship, stopping power, immersion in the sea/river etc.; however, only specific relevant features will be activated by particular metaphors. Thus in NEWS ANCHOR, the salient features might be attachment (to the news programme = Ship), fixedness, trustworthiness, reliability and immovability. Other, non-salient features of ANCHOR, such as weight, immersion, shape, stopping power and so forth, are not invoked. The expression also 'maps' onto the conceptual metaphor of an ENTERPRISE (the news programme) = SHIP, where the function of an anchor is to prevent the metaphorical 'vessel' (the news broadcast) from 'drifting' out of control.

3.2.1 Metaphoricity

Metaphoricity is a measure of how metaphorical an expression is, that is, how far a figurative term has moved in meaning from its source (usually concrete) meaning to a more abstract target meaning. In its weakest form this is a simple 'transfer', that is, an expression, where there is a change of domain or setting but little or no change in meaning, such as LINE ASTERN, which originally applied only to ships moving in formation:

- 1 'Make to Goliath and Zealous: 'Rejoin me and take station ahead.'
'Make to all others: 'Form up in line astern as planned.'
(MTC/ MF/NM/MM1)

but has transferred to other transport domains to apply to aircraft, racing cars and even trams¹², without any substantive change in meaning:

- 2 As they approached the island some 30 minutes later fourteen Hurricanes were scrambled and a savage melee developed over the island. Sqn. Ldr. Lambert who was leading on this occasion, ordered the formation to go into line astern for the attack. (BNC/CA8)

Note that Goatly (2011:31) calls this move from one domain to another, 'Extension', and uses the term 'Transfer' to describe movement in use and meaning from a 'distant semantic field'. However, according to dictionary definitions (MMD, ODP), transfer is a process of moving and/or copying without any change in meaning, while the term 'extension' implies a change in meaning or use. In this study, I therefore reserve the term 'transfer' for this specific process and use 'extension' to describe additional meanings/exploitations that an expression may acquire through the metaphorisation process.

At the other end of the scale are purely idiomatic expressions such as TAKE ABACK¹³ or STAND ALOOF¹⁴, where no awareness or understanding of the source expression remains in the consciousness of most users.

This measurement is multi-dimensional in that metaphoricity can be judged by a number of factors including Activity' (Goatly, 2011), Transparency (Moon, 1998:19-22) Resonance, Salient perceptual/cognitive features, Semantic class (Hanks, (2006), Fixedness of form (Hanks, 2004:272) and Colligational behaviour (Goatly 2011).

3.2.1.1 Concepts of Activity

In Figure 12, (below) Goatly gives a cline of conventionality, with examples of source and target words described in terms of their activity level, ranging from dead to active, and from most conventional uses to what he regards as unconventional or innovative uses. These levels are discussed below.

3.2.1.1.1 Dead Metaphors

Muller (2008:181) points out that traditionally, dead and inactive metaphors have drawn little academic attention, particularly in the literary world, often being regarded as having lost their metaphorical force and to have become, to all intents and purposes, literal usages. 'Dead' is often used to describe all established, conventional metaphors; only newly coined metaphors are regarded as 'alive'. However, among linguistic researchers, the term is more complicated. Lakoff declares the 'The death of the dead metaphor', calling it a 'holdover from a traditional folk theory of language' (1987:143), although he still accepts the term for expressions where the original, literal term, from which the metaphor has arisen, is no longer extant. In Figure 12, above, Goatly (2011:31-35) uses 'dead' to describe metaphors that have become lexicalised, developing fixed meanings that no longer carry echoes of their origins. He differentiates between 'dead' metaphors, where the original use of a term has fallen out of use and is therefore not recoverable, and 'dead and buried' metaphors, where changes in form, over time, and particularly where the source term comes from another language, have disguised the original source term so that it is no longer recoverable.

Deignan uses the term 'historical' rather than 'dead' to describe expressions where:

... senses [are] originally formed by metaphorical extension from a literal sense that has since dropped out of use. ... if citations of a linguistic metaphor show no instances of a related literal sense, whether the same part of speech or otherwise, then they are regarded as historical. (Deignan, 2005:40)

In Deignan's classification, only Goatly's 'dead and buried' metaphors are regarded as dead.

Hanks, describes such expressions as having become 'idiomaticised', 'because [the] meaning is fixed and does not depend on resonance between primary and secondary subjects' (2006:27). Thus, where the source expression is defunct and only the metaphorical meaning remains in use, so that it is now the primary sense, it should be regarded as an idiomatic expression. In this study, I use Hanks' classification, which encompasses the idea of independent meaning, regardless of origin, and of fixed form, which neither of the other designations provide.

As an example, TAKE ABACK, which originated in the Old English ABACK meaning, 'in a backward direction' (OED, updated Dec, 2011), is cited as a specific maritime technical term from early in the 17th Century:

Aback

3. Naut. With the front surface of a sail exposed to the wind so that the sail, if square, is pressed back against the mast, or if fore-and-aft, is filled from the opposite side; having a sail pressed back in this way and was used in a formulaic phrasal verb:

To Take Aback

1. trans. (in pass.). Of a sail: to be suddenly pressed back against the mast, preventing forward progress, either through bad steering or a change in the wind. Of a ship, etc.: to be caught in this way.

However, in modern English, this expression now has no maritime connections, as the MMD illustrates:

be taken aback
to be shocked or surprised, especially by something that someone says or does to you (MMD, 2013)

TAKE ABACK has become fully lexicalised and is no longer recognised, by most users, as metaphorical. Here, the original primary sense has been lost and the secondary sense has become the literal meaning, apart from when used in highly specialised maritime texts.

There is no resonance between the maritime and modern senses; it is therefore classified as idiomaticised.¹⁵

While Goatly's classification system, as illustrated in Figure 3, shows four of the five designations of metaphor to be inactive, much of the focus of his work tends to be on active, innovative, and thus non-conventional, metaphors, used to express new ideas of analogy or to provide new insight into accepted ideas, as stylistic devices. However, conceptual metaphor theorists, such as Lakoff and Johnson (2003) and Kovecses (2002:ix), see conventionalised metaphors and idiomatic expressions as being at the heart of the conceptual metaphor system, being so deeply entrenched within the consciousness of the user that they evoke meaning without recourse to decoding as metaphors:

...because so-called dead metaphors are highly entrenched and conventionalized, they are an active and influential means of conceptualization

It is the conventionalised metaphors that express the cultural landscape of a discourse community, because they have been adopted and accepted as valid expressions of that culture, while innovative metaphors are still to be tested and either accepted or rejected by the community at large. In this study, I focus specifically on conventionalised, established metaphors, rather than on innovative expressions, which have little to say from a cultural, conceptual viewpoint, until they have become adopted by the discourse community.

3.2.1.1.2 Inactive Metaphors

For Goatly, inactive metaphors are conventional metaphorical expressions that still resonate with the salient features of the source expression. Whereas dead metaphors and their sources, where they still exist, may be regarded as homonyms (identical words with different meanings), inactive metaphors and their sources will be regarded as polysemous, (different words with the same meaning existing side by side). Based on the degree to which inactive metaphors need to be traced back to their roots for accurate interpretation, he classifies them as either 'sleeping' or 'tired'. The distinction Goatly makes (2011:32) is subtle; 'sleeping' metaphors, he suggests, are established metaphors where the secondary meaning exists alongside the source meaning, which remains in use but is no longer required or reviewed to interpret the metaphor; the two terms have become polysemous. With 'tired' metaphors, the salient features of the source are more readily accessed and might be re-awakened (activated) to make new and dynamic metaphors. Inactive metaphors therefore have well established fixed meanings, but unlike idiomatic expressions, the source of the metaphor is still recoverable and the resonances may be exploited to reinforce the meaning of the metaphor, often through the addition of further metaphorical expressions from the same semantic field, in extended metaphors or 'clusters' (Deignan, 2005:29), as in:

- 1 At present the social representation theorists illustrate how we cast our anchors.
 But anchors not only can be cast, but they can be hailed up.
 Common-sense, or rhetorical, thinking involves the raising and dropping of anchors, not to mention the continual arguments about whether to raise or lower the metaphorical anchor at any given moment.
 This raising and lowering of anchors will provide the argumentative forms for the debates, whose content may be provided by the contrary themes of the sensus communis.
 In this son of argumentative thinking, more is involved than the dropping of anchors, for it is situated in the context of argumentation.
 For instance, we might attempt to sink our own anchors in the sandy sea-bed of mercy, whilst at the same time hauling up our opponents' anchors from the rocks of justice. (BNC/FA9)

'Anchoring' and 'Objectification' are specific concepts within the highly specialised field of social psychology known as Social Representations Theory (Moscovici, 1961) Where 'Anchoring' is a metaphor for fixing scientific concepts or beliefs in the minds of a non-specialist population. Thus the salient feature of the anchor being exploited is its ability to hold something (a concept) in place and attach it to a vessel (the mind). This maps onto the MCMs of MIND = SHIP, KNOWLEDGE = OCEAN, LEARNING PROCESS = SEA VOYAGE. This is a conventional use of the anchor metaphor, albeit in a new field¹⁶. However, in this text (Billig, 1991), the maritime resonances of ANCHOR are fully and deliberately exploited through collocating and colligating maritime technical phrases: Cast, drop, lower, raise, sink, hauling and seabed. The paragraph ends with two innovative maritime metaphors: 'The sandy sea-bed of mercy' and the 'rocks of justice', which exploit salient features of anchorages, where 'sandy sea-beds' are safe, soft anchorages, while rocks are dangerous and difficult places to anchor, presumably reflecting the forgiving nature of mercy and the unyielding and precarious nature of justice. The two innovative metaphors are components of the extended ANCHOR metaphor, which exploit MCMs of ARGUMENT = SEA VOYAGE, IDEAS / BELIEFS = SHIPS, GOAL = ANCHORAGE.

To call ANCHOR, in this context, an inactive metaphor is unhelpful. The use of the ANCHOR metaphor is vibrant and productive, generating new innovative metaphors. Indeed ANCHOR indicates that such expressions are still capable of exploitation and modification, particularly when the ideas they embody are extended into new semantic fields. In Goatly's classification, ANCHOR would be classified as tired, whereas I classify such expressions as 'active conventionalised' metaphors because they still actively exploit resonances from the source domain.

¹⁶ Note too, that even if we regard this as an innovative metaphor, when first adopted by Moscovici in 1961, a quick search on Google for the phrase 'Anchoring and Objectification' yields 68,900 results, suggesting that the metaphor is well and truly established now in 2013.

I also replace Goatly's designation of 'sleeping' with the label 'dormant', which, according to the ODP, carries the meaning of 'temporarily inactive', thus allowing for the likelihood of change in either direction, either re-activation or fossilisation, as an idiomatic expression. The judgement of activity or dormancy is based on the exploitation of the 'resonance' a target expression has with its source, expressed both collocationally and, as in the example above, colligationally, and its continued or novel exploitation in modern discourse.

ANCHOR (as both noun and verb) appears in Old English texts dating back to the ninth century (OED) and it is used figuratively in the biblical Epistle to the Hebrews (vi.19), dating back to the first century AD:

1382 Bible (Wycliffite, E.V.) Heb. vi. 19 The which as an ankir we han sikir to the soule [1611 Which hope we haue as an anker of the soule. (OED 2012)

Despite this long history of metaphorical use, ANCHOR metaphors are still conventionalised rather than idiomatic. The relationship with the source is transparent (Moon, 1998:22), that is, the link between the source concept of the physical ship's anchor, with its features of strength, security and fixedness, and the idea of ANCHOR = HOPE is easily accessed by the user, who recognises the maritime resonances of ANCHOR, even when they are not being specifically exploited. The repeated use of the symbol over a period of two thousand years has not idiomaticised the expression.

The salient features of ANCHOR still actively generate new uses, for example, in the domain of computing, where its image has become the standard symbol () for fixing the position of graphical 'objects' on the electronic page:

- 2 Ventura is, and will probably always be, document oriented.
That means that it knows about things like sections and chapters, tables of contents, indexes and anchored text and graphics. (BNC/G00)

3 Anchored Objects

If you want a graphical object to appear next to a particular part of a block of text, you can anchor the object to the text so it moves with it. Copy the object (Ctrl+C), click on the text in the Text Tool to position the text cursor where you would like to place the anchor, then paste (Ctrl+V). Then position the object where you would like it, using the Selector Tool. Now if you edit or move the text, the anchored object moves with the anchor point. Note that you can't use anchoring and repelling on the same object. (Xara, 2010)

This appears to be an extension of the conventionalised use of ANCHOR (V) = to hold (something) in place, which exploits the salient features of physical immovability, security and attachment, from other transferred uses such as engineering, where the meaning remains concrete, referring to physical restraints for physical objects as in:

- 4 The restraint system incorporates strategically positioned ringbolts installed in the structure of a building which act as anchor points for a personal safety harness. (BNC/APV)

In computer usage, the entities being 'restrained' and the 'surface' they are being 'fixed' to, are electronic, digital phenomena with no physical existence; the meaning of ANCHOR is entirely abstract and far removed from its original maritime usage, thus making this, at the time of its coining, in the 1980s, an innovative, unconventional rather than conventionalised use of ANCHOR. Its highly successful and wide scale adoption in the domain of computing, however, means that this usage has quickly become conventionalised. The earliest references to ANCHOR, in a computing context, in the OED come in draft additions to the first edition in September 2006, citing instances from 1988:

Computing. A section of a hypertext document which is the source or destination of a hyperlink; the tags used in markup languages (esp. HTML) to create such a hyperlink or to name a section of a hypertext document so that it may be referred to in a hyperlink.

1988 N. YANKELOVICH ET AL. in S. Ambron & K. Hooper Interactive Multimedia 61 Textual anchors are currently limited to insertion points and are represented internally by only one pointer.

1995 Online Access Sept. 51/2 There are two types of anchors: reference anchors and named anchors. (OED)

Within the BNC data, as well as a quick survey of on-line computer programme 'help' texts, there are no instances of maritime collocates or extended maritime metaphors appearing in these computer texts. On the other hand, the transparency of the expression and the retention of the traditional anchor symbol mean that the maritime roots of the expression are available but not required for the interpretation of the term; this secondary meaning is established in its own right, making this a dormant conventionalised metaphor.

Similarly, another innovative metaphorical use of ANCHORS meaning brakes was coined in the 1930s by bus drivers, and subsequently adopted by motorists generally (Partridge, 2002:18):

- 5 Anyway, she hit the hedge which is only about an inch thick and found there was nothing this side.
I think maybe she jammed the anchors on, because the car didn't sail out into space or anything.' (BNC/HWL)

The salient feature is, presumably, the stopping power of the ship's anchor, although few, if any of the other salient features of anchors (fixedness, attachment, weight, shape etc.) can be applied in the target field. The maritime resonances come from the perception of a bus as a large, passenger-carrying vessel, which, much like an ocean liner, would, due to its bulk, be difficult to stop. There is, however, no reference in Smyth to the use of the anchor to stop a ship's forward progress, which indeed would be hazardous to hull and rigging, given the forces being exerted. Thus, this usage appears to be an over-extension of the idea of the function of the ship's anchor to hold a ship from drifting, rather than directly from any maritime usage. By the time the expression has been adopted by the general motoring public, such resonances have faded and the expression is a semi-transparent, dormant conventionalised metaphor or possibly, fully idiomaticised in the minds of most users.

3.2.1.1.3 Active Metaphors

According to Goatly, 'active' metaphors are completely new innovative expressions drawing on hitherto unexploited features of comparison or analogy between source and target and are thus unconventional uses. In Hanks' terms, they are innovative or dynamic exploitations. Their meaning is constructed through context and/or familiarity with the genre/topic on the part of the receiver. As Hanks puts it:

Dynamic metaphors are coined ad hoc to express some new insight; conventional metaphors are just one more kind of normal use of language.
(2006:17).

They are novel usages that require the receiver to make a conscious assessment of the features of the source and target terms and relate them to the context in order to reach the target meaning. This may lead to new interpretations of both terms. In the Theory of Norms and Exploitations (TNE) (Hanks, 2004, Jezek and Hanks, 2010), metaphors are seen in terms of 'norms', that is, established patterns of usage, and 'exploitations', which are 'dynamic and creative' uses of norms (Jezek and Hanks, 2010:17) for specific effect. Deignan points out that 'it seems likely that all conventional linguistic metaphors must have been innovative at some point in history' (2005:40), and have become conventionalised through repeated use. Similarly Jezek and Hanks suggests that:

'An exploitation may be picked up by other users of the language and become established as a norm in its own right. Today's exploitation may be tomorrow's secondary convention'. (2010:17)

Thus, TAKE ABACK (see above), which was originally an innovative metaphor that required explanation when employed outside the maritime domain:

TAKEN ABACK: Phrasal Verb PV1:2

1751 T. Smollett Peregrine Pickle I. ii. 14 Some of those little fellows that hold their heads high, would be taken all aback, as the saying is.

1844 J. T. J. Hewlett Parsons & Widows liii, I never saw a man more 'taken aback' as the sailors say. (OED, 1989) is now fixed in form and idiomatic; it will not be recognised by most modern users as metaphorical at all. What was originally the secondary meaning has been narrowed down, as the original expression has fallen out of use, to become the primary, and for most users, the only meaning.

The distinction between literal meaning and metaphor blurs into a distinction between primary and secondary word senses, the latter being syntagmatically more tightly constrained than the former.

Innovative metaphors are effectively new coinages or metaphorical uses of a source term, as we might perhaps classify the maritime acronym SONAR (Sound Navigation And Ranging), when applied to animal senses rather than electronic underwater surveillance.

6 There is no point in being able to locate something, either visually or through smell or sonar (whatever your métier), if you do not possess the motor organs and behavioural patterns to deal effectively with that something. (BNC/BMY)

According to the OED (2nd Edition 1989), this expression, initially coined as an acronym during World War II by American scientists developing submarine detection technologies, to mirror the term RADAR, was only adopted in the 1960s as a metaphor for the echo-location abilities of creatures such as bats, whales and dolphins:

1961 W. N. Kellogg Porpoises & Sonar (1962) iv. 48 The idea that sonar is systematically used by the great whales and porpoises is...a new and intriguing thought. (OED, 1989) at which time it would have been an innovative metaphor. However, the technical and zoological terms now exist in parallel and the original innovative use has become conventionalised.

Within the MTC data, MEs used as active, innovative metaphors are very rare, perhaps because of the historical nature of the majority of texts within the corpus. This is not say, however, that the MEs are used unimaginatively, indeed many of these uses are highly inventive, but are still exploiting conventionalised meanings. As has already been discussed, by their very nature, innovative metaphors will have very short lifespans, either becoming accepted as conventionalised secondary senses, or failing to be adopted by the discourse community and falling out of use, remaining only as single instances. The rarity of such metaphors in the data, and their transitory nature, makes the classification unhelpful as a major category within this study, although it may be applied to certain dormant conventionalised metaphors that have become, in Goatly's terms, re-activated and thus are used in new or innovative ways. As discussed above, I reserve the term 'active' for conventionalised metaphors that continue to actively exploit their maritime resonances. Innovative metaphors are regarded as transient, that is, they have yet to be adopted or rejected by the discourse community at large.

3.2.1.2 Salient cognitive (or perceptual) features.

Hanks describes conventional metaphors as 'secondary senses' (2006:19) because they do not use the full range of meaning potentials available for the metaphorical interpretation of the word, but only selected elements of it. As discussed above, the key to metaphoricity lies with the perception by the users, of certain common features or qualities that are evident in the source and target domains of the metaphor. Among the MEs in this study, for example, some of the salient features of ANCHOR, both as a noun and a verb, are, strength, security and immovability, which are qualities that might be mapped onto a metaphorical description of abstract concepts such as moral strength, as in:

- 1 This type demonstrates courage in the face of adversity which conquers fear. It is someone who is not afraid of responsibility or commitment, whose daily disciplines provide an anchor in the rough sea of life who does not switch his allegiance, whatever the cost, whose nobility of soul never stoops to treachery even if his life or livelihood is at stake. BNC/B21
- 2 Oh! hear me witness that my heart is set on higher things; it would sail into far seas unvisited of man, but always there is this anchor of the flesh chaining it to its native shore.' (BNC/EC8)

Other features of the literal object, such as its shape, weight, composition and tendency to spend periods underwater, are not, in these instances at least, salient, although the original maritime association of the object and, in particular, its literal, physical attachment to a ship, is used to strengthen the overarching conceptual metaphor of LIFE IS A SEA VOYAGE, which is reflected in the extended metaphors¹⁷ used in both texts.

Hanks (2006:22) discusses the strength of metaphor in terms of these 'shared properties' between the 'primary' and 'secondary' meanings of the word. Thus the fewer 'shared properties' there are, the more metaphorical the expression is, as the distance between literal and figurative meaning increases. Conversely, the more 'shared properties' there are, the closer the meanings become and the weaker the metaphor is deemed to be.

In the MTC, WELCOME ABOARD is a formalised ME used only in the context of boarding a ship, e.g.:

- 3 'Just joined?'
 Milvain nodded and remembered what the burly coxswain had told him.
 'Yes, Petty Officer. From Chatham.'
 'Welcome aboard.' (MTC/MF/DR/1))

Here the original, 'primary' or 'core' maritime meaning of ABOARD is invoked as 'on a ship' as cited in the OED (updated entry 2009):

a. Within the boards or sides of (a ship); on board.

(a) With reference to position. On or in a ship or other waterborne vessel; †at or on the side of a ship (obs.).

The OED definition for the phrase WELCOME ABOARD is found under Welcome:

d. welcome aboard phr. said (in allusion to nautical usage) as a joc. greeting to someone joining a particular group, enterprise, etc. (OED)

In the BNC, WELCOME ABOARD is found in both literal and a range of metaphorical usages. Out of 21 lines, eight are literal maritime uses.

- 4 You'll be Commander Talbot, of course.'
 The voice was deep, the Irish brogue unmistakable.
 'You are welcome aboard.
 Has there been any further deterioration in the situation?'
 'No.
 The only deterioration possible, Captain, is one I don't care to imagine.'
 (BNC/CKC)

Here, while the primary function of WELCOME ABOARD is as in (3) above, the context of the line within (4), as a whole, is more abstract, in that 'Commander Talbot' is not just stepping on board the ship, in a physical sense, but is also joining a specialised team working on a specific task. While ABOARD is classified in the OED as referring to physical location, a ship is not merely vessel, afloat on the sea, but includes, in addition to the sense of boarding the physical entity of the vessel, the idea of joining the human/social entity of the ship's crew, for a specific purpose. Thus the salient features of the ME 'WELCOME ABOARD' include (a) acknowledgement of physical arrival on a ship, (b) recognition of a shared journey, (c) acceptance into membership of a particular group and (d) recognition of shared goals.

In the BNC, there are five occurrences of 'transferred' usage, where the source meaning of the expression is transferred into a new domain but retains its primary function or meaning, e.g.:

- 5 The air hostess smiled.
'Welcome aboard, sir. Would you like a newspaper?' (BNC/GW5)

In 5, the vehicle is an aircraft, rather than a ship, but formal recognition of arrival on board a vessel, is still the key salient feature; the greeting acts to imply a shared journey and destination and a deliberate evocation of the idea of joining a group working together, with the cabin 'crew', to ensure a safe and pleasant journey, by conferring membership status on the passenger.

Texts 6 and 7 below, are expressions of two conceptual metaphors:

A PROJECT IS A VOYAGE

AN ORGANISATION IS A SHIP

- 6 Widmark had recently joined John Ford's repertory company and so Wayne, who was producing and directing as well as starring as Davy Crockett, was delighted when Widmark accepted the role of Jim Bowie - so much so that he took an ad in the Hollywood Reporter reading 'Welcome aboard, Dick.'
(BNC/CDG)

In (6) there is no physical vehicle. The story refers to the making of the 1960 Hollywood film, 'The Alamo', and John Wayne is formally acknowledging that fellow actor Richard Widmark is joining the cast of the film. Most of the salient features of the original expression are still being exploited, but with the key differences being that the 'vehicle' is now a film project rather than a ship, and the cast and film 'crew' take the place of the ship's crew. The destination is no longer a physical point on the globe, but a more abstract concept of project completion.

- 7 New arrival: Welcome aboard son is the message from SDLP former Mayor Mary Bradley to newly-elected son-in-law Martin Bradley.
(BNC/HJ4)

Text 7 is still more abstract and therefore more metaphorical; ABOARD refers to a politician's election to parliament as a member of a particular political party. The connotations are complex; becoming a Member of Parliament is joining a recognised group made up of other MPs of all parties and persuasions, but in addition, the greeting also applies to membership of a more specialised group: MPs representing the SDLP, and then membership of a special familial group of successful politicians, who share political beliefs and goals. Furthermore, the maritime conceptual metaphors of POLITICS = SEA, PARTY = SHIP, CAMPAIGN = VOYAGE are all being exploited here.

3.2.1.3 Resonance

A metaphor is a word or expression that is used to talk about an entity or quality other than that referred to by its core, or most basic meaning. This non-core use expresses a perceived relationship with the core meaning of the word, and in many cases between two semantic fields. (Deignan, 2005:34)

Deignan, in her definition of metaphor, talks of a 'perceived relationship' between the core and non-core use of a words or expression, while Moon suggests that 'the source domain of the metaphor leads to connotations in the target domain' (1998:23). These relationships or connotations can be described as resonances that are evoked to provide the secondary meaning of the words being used. These resonances are revealed through the collocational behaviour of the expression; the collocates of an ME provide the immediate context that give it meaning; they can generate strong additional resonances with the secondary subject to reinforce the central metaphor and form the basis for extended metaphors:

Finally, resonance is part of the armoury of collocation studies. Meaning is not created ex-nihilo, but neither is it found in words alone. Collocation provides us with a powerful tool to see how meanings have been created within contexts.

(Williams and Millon, 2009:16)

As Hanks (2006:20) notes, significant collocates can activate numerous secondary resonances in metaphors and the dissonance created by inappropriate collocations is, perhaps, at the root our dislike of mixed metaphors.

The lack of maritime collocations with an expression that was originally a maritime metaphor is a strong indication of idiomaticity, as it demonstrates a lack of maritime resonance, suggesting that any connection between source and target has been lost and that the secondary meaning has now replaced the primary meaning.

To illustrate this point, we can look at the ME 'TAKE ON BOARD'¹⁸. In Figure 13 (below), the extracts from the MTC all show the source meaning of the expression as 'physically receiving goods, equipment or people on to a ship.' There are a number of specifically maritime collocates, including sea, sail of the line (1), coast (2), frigates, vessels (3). Furthermore the objects taken aboard are all concrete entities: some provisions (1), eight Frenchmen, Mons. Prejant (2), battery (3).

- 1 For this purpose he put to sea from Carlisle Bay, with 22 Sail of the Line, and proceeded to Antigua, where he took on board some provisions, with the 28th, and two companies of the 4th regiment of foot, under the command of General Prescott.
- 2 AT five A.M. we took on board eight Frenchmen, together with Mons. Prejant, from off the coast of France, where the greater part of them had been employed on secret service
- 3 When the head of the British column entered Whitehall, the two new American frigates 'Washington' and 'Effingham' were wrapped in flames. Both were new vessels, and neither had yet taken on board her battery.

BNC

- 4 Those visions come from within ourselves. Come from the way in which we don't necessarily take on board what we are learning.
- 5 Our business is to ensure that what we are doing now is done properly, not to take on board new activities and try and finance them at the expense of groups which are already suffering very poor, or at least inadequate services.
- 6 I would be pleased if you could now take on board the extension of formal smoking at work restrictions as applied at Regional Headquarters and Regional Chambers to apply to Chesser House and for this to be formally agreed by the Council.

In the BNC, texts 4-6, the total absence of any maritime collocates, and thus of maritime resonances, suggests the idiomatisation of the expression, which has become purely abstract, with meanings of understanding and assimilation of ideas (4), acceptance of additional unnecessary financial commitments (5), and adoption and implementation of legislation (6).

Despite this lack of resonance, however, in these three lines, TAKE ON BOARD realises a number of maritime conceptual metaphors: THE MIND = SHIP, BUSINESS = SHIP, RESPONSIBILITY = CARGO/BURDEN and IDEAS = CARGO.

Current ALDs, such as Macmillan (2013), give no hint of any maritime usage or origin for the expression:

Take something on board
To consider an idea, problem, or situation and try to deal with it.

Thus the loss of resonance with the original maritime source has resulted in a loss of metaphoricity, so that, for most users, the maritime and non-maritime uses are, at best, homonymous; TO TAKE ON BOARD, in this sense, has become a purely idiomatic phrase.

In Hanks' opinion, resonance is '... the most reliable criterion for metaphoricity.' (2010b:140), while Williams and Millon (2009) describe resonance as being:

... part of the wider context. Time spent in exploring resonance patterns may assist in showing why one choice is preferable to another within a given context so that what is simply correct can be replaced by what is natural and correct (Williams and Millon, 2009:16)

Williams and Millon are writing from a pedagogical point of view, but their observation has implications when considering the choice of maritime metaphors in preference to those from other domains. In the data found in the MTC and the BNC, particularly with regard to sports, finance and political language, there appears to be a fondness for maritime metaphors that suggests perceived resonances with those domains, perhaps relating to Britain's historical dominance of the sea, both militarily and commercially and the concomitant resonances of power, success against the odds and global reach that maritime metaphors carry with them.

3.2.1.4 Transparency and Opacity

A further useful typological distinction, closely linked to the concept of active and dormant metaphors and idiomatic expressions, can also be made in terms used by Moon (1998:19ff) with regard to 'transparency', that is, how readily a reader/hearer may recover the primary, source meaning from the individual components of the expression.

Moon classifies metaphors as transparent, semi-transparent or opaque on a continuum of accessibility (1998:22), however, as she herself points out, such designations are somewhat subjective and have to be based on an assumption of complete ignorance on the part of the receiver. Moon's classifications are set out below.

Transparent metaphors: these are easily decipherable by the receiver, without reliance on any specialised knowledge of the topic or lexicon. Among the MEs explored here, transparent metaphors probably include WELCOME / COME ABOARD, KEEP AFLOAT and ANCHOR.

Semi-transparent metaphors will require some specialised knowledge in order to be successfully interpreted; such expressions may be open to misinterpretation in detail, while retaining the general sense of the metaphor. MEs such as FULL STEAM AHEAD, GO / RUN AGROUND, THROW / GO OVERBOARD and ON AN EVEN KEEL, an ME suggested by Moon herself, fall into this category.

Opaque metaphors are those that are indecipherable to anyone unfamiliar with the expression, without specialised knowledge of the origins of the phrase. Opaque expressions from this study would include TAKE ABACK and STAND ALOOF; both originally highly technical terms with specialised maritime meanings. Opaque metaphors are likely to be classified as idiomatic, as the expression no longer evokes any part of its 'original' source usage. Conversely, however, idiomatic expressions need not always be opaque. Note, for example TAKE ON BOARD, discussed earlier, where the expression is actually semi-transparent to anyone familiar with the use of 'ON BOARD' in either its maritime or transferred transport roles.

3.2.1.5 Semantic Class

Hanks points out that abstract nouns are rarely, if ever, used metaphorically (2006:20). He also notes that nouns for particular types of locations, whether physical or metaphysical, and nouns and verbs describing certain, often dramatic events or processes, appear to lend themselves particularly well to metaphorical use. Despite the tendency among researchers to cite noun-based metaphors in their examples (Deignan, 2005:147), Cameron (2003) found that, in a study of classroom language, nearly 50% of the metaphors occurring in her data were based on verbs and only 5% on nouns. Cameron's data comes from a study of spoken language in schools, so may not be directly comparable with the data used in this study, which is entirely taken from written, and in most cases, 'literary' texts. This study shows that the metaphorical elements of many MEs, at least those starting with 'A', are very often adverbs and adjectives, rather than nouns or verbs; e.g. (TAKE) ABACK, ABOARD, IN LINE ABREAST / AHEAD / ASTERN, ADRIFT, AFLOAT, AGROUND, AHEAD, ALL TO PIECES, ALL AT SEA, ALL STANDING. The a prefix, which is a feature of many of these expressions comes, in some cases, such as ABOARD, from the French preposition à:

Aboard, adv. and prep.

Etymology: Probably partly < a *prep.*1 + board n., and partly < Middle French a bord on a ship (1393 or earlier; French à bord ; compare bord à bord (of two ships) with sides touching (c1310 in Old French), very close together (16th cent.)) < a to (see a- prefix5) + bord side of a ship, edge (see board n.). (OED, updated 2008)

And in others, such as ADRIFT, from Old English prepositions such as an and on, as cited in the OED, as 'expressing position' or 'motion to a position of contact' etc.', and Old English prefixes:

a-, prefix¹

With verbs, implying motion onward or away from a position; hence (originally with verbs of motion) adding intensity.(OED, updated, 2008)

Thus the prevalence of adverbial expressions in this data may be a result of the sample chosen and is not necessarily representative of MEs as a whole. However, the fact that so many of the MEs seen in the data are adverbial, demonstrates the descriptive function of many maritime metaphors that are used to add particular qualities, through maritime resonances, to target domains.

Metaphorisation may be signalled by a change in the syntactic class of a word. Deignan (2006:108) has looked systematically at certain source domains, especially animal and plant terms for specific metaphorical expressions where there is a change of word class. She notes (ibid: 114) that there is a strong tendency for such expressions to move from literal, nominal forms to metaphorical, verbal forms and that, even where there are both nominal and verbal metaphorical forms of an expression, the verbal form is likely to be more frequent. This correlates with Hanks' claim that metaphorisation disfavours abstraction, as verbal forms express embodied ideas of types of actions, while nominal forms more often express concrete entities.

Within the MTC analysis, any such grammatical features are noted along with any inflectional variations that signify changes of metaphorical meaning. Deignan (2006:114) uses an extended maritime metaphor, taken from the BoE, to illustrate the subtleties of meaning change brought about by different inflections of the word ROCK (N), which, in the singular has a positive prosody of stability or strength, as in 'rock of stability' and 'the rock on which our society is built', compared to a negative prosody, when used in the plural, as in:

A flagship initiative started eight months ago to boost home ownership in Greater London has hit the rocks already or, from the BNC

FRED COUPLES snubbed President Bush and his marriage hit the rocks

Hanks suggests that words from 'highly technical registers are rarely used metaphorically' (2006:21), even when employed outside the original technical domain. However, such terms may change over time from technical, specialised terms into non-technical, general register items and thus become available for metaphorical use. This helps to explain the presence of such, originally highly technical, specialised MEs as STAND ALOOF, TAKE ABACK and CLUED (originally CLEWED)-UP as metaphors in the general register.

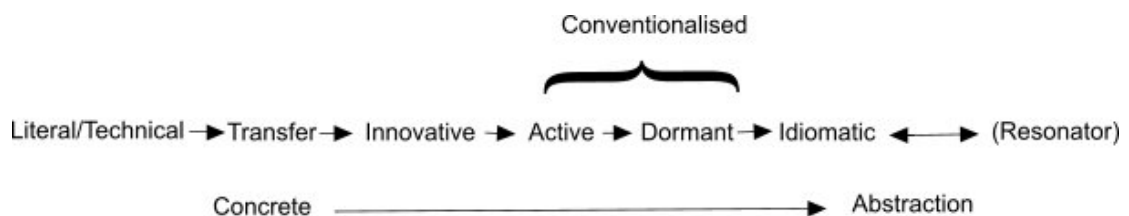

3.3 The Metaphorical Model

I now outline the model used for the analysis of MEs within this study. The model needs to take into account the factors outlined above and to provide a comprehensive picture of each expression and its place along a cline of metaphoricity as well as mapping any relationship with overarching conceptual metaphors and more specific maritime conceptual metaphors.

3.3.1 The Cline of Metaphoricity and Key Meanings

MEs are categorised according to the level of metaphoricity they display in their various uses and contexts, in line with the criteria outlined in 3.2.1 (above); the model is built upon those concepts.

The cline represents varying degrees of metaphoricity. Although there is an apparent progression from innovation to conventionalisation to idiomaticisation for some expressions, it is not possible to predict which innovative expressions will be adopted by a discourse community and thus become conventionalised and which will not. As has been noted with ANCHOR, neither is it possible to safely predict which conventionalised metaphors will become idiomatic or dormant and which will remain active. Thus the order given in Figure 14 is based on the metaphoricity of MEs and the increased level of abstraction they express, and is not intended to imply any sense of developmental progression.

Transfers are not regarded as metaphorical uses, as there is no change in meaning involved in the move from one domain to another, hence they are placed next to literal /technical uses in Figure 14, above. Transfers are followed by the innovative metaphors that are the most creative uses of language, but which have little cultural significance unless they become conventionalised through adoption by the discourse community at large. These are followed by two levels of conventionality, with the most fixed and least resonant (dormant) expressions following the active, most resonant metaphors. We then have idiomatic expressions, that are generally fixed in form and so well established as to be regarded as no longer metaphorical, having fixed meanings in their own right, entirely independent of the source.

Finally, In addition to these categories of metaphor, I use the term ‘Resonator’ to describe a class of idiomaticised MEs that appears in the data, which, while not being specifically metaphorical, and indeed, in some cases not even representing ‘genuine’ maritime language, are used by speakers or writers to evoke a maritime ‘flavour’ within a text. These are often maritime clichés or interjections along the lines of ‘Arrr Jim lad!’ or ‘Shiver me timbers!’, but also include genuine MEs such as ‘AYE, AYE, SIR!’ , ‘AVAST!’ and ‘MAN OVERBOARD!’ when used in non-maritime contexts. These are described and defined in more detail in the analysis in 5.8 and the discussion in 6.2.7.

3.3.1.1 Key Meaning

As we have seen with ANCHOR, a single ME may be used at a number of levels of metaphoricity, based on the distance between source and target meanings. The interpretation of a metaphor is dependant on the correct selection of salient features from the source being mapped onto the target. I have adopted the term ‘Key Meaning’ to describe the particular ‘meaning potential’ (Hanks, 2006) that a specific metaphorical use realises.

...words only have meanings when they are put into context. In isolation they have meaning potentials, which are composed of rather fuzzy semantic components, some or all of which are activated when the word is used.

ANCHOR has a number of realisations which exploit particular salient features, ranging from the primary, concrete source meaning of a ship’s mooring device, through varying degrees of abstraction, to idiomatic expressions, such as ‘TV anchor’ and ‘anchor business’. The key meaning is the specific realisation for a particular metaphorical use. With transfers, the key meaning will be identical with the source term, but applied in a different domain; with idiomatic expressions, this key meaning will usually be the current dictionary definition as shown in ALDs such as the ODP or the MMD. Similarly, with conventionalised metaphors, the key meaning will often, but not always, be among those listed in such dictionaries, often, particularly with active conventionalised metaphors, the specific realisation of a key meaning will need to be derived from the context or through analysis of the MTC and BNC data.

For innovative metaphors, the key meaning(s) are dependant upon the specific context as well as the writer’s and receiver’s generic and stylistic knowledge and experience. As previously pointed out, innovative metaphors are rare within the data in this study; almost by definition, MEs are established, conventional usages that often exploit or reinforce MCMs. Where innovative maritime metaphors occur in the BNC they are described and discussed in the appropriate sections within the analysis in Chapter 4. The identification of key meaning is essential to differentiate between metaphorical uses and, in particular, to identify whether a usage should be considered to be a re-activation of a dormant conventionalised metaphor, or an innovative exploitation.

As ANCHOR illustrates, what may appear at first glance to be different metaphorical meanings, may actually be regarded as different realisations of the same metaphor, when the key meaning is identified. Thus ANCHOR MAN, when used in mountaineering and ‘tug-of-war’ contexts has a key meaning of man providing a physical restraint/fixing point for fellow climbers or team members. However, ANCHOR MAN, is also used in other team sports to mean:

The central or most dependable contributor to something (ODP).

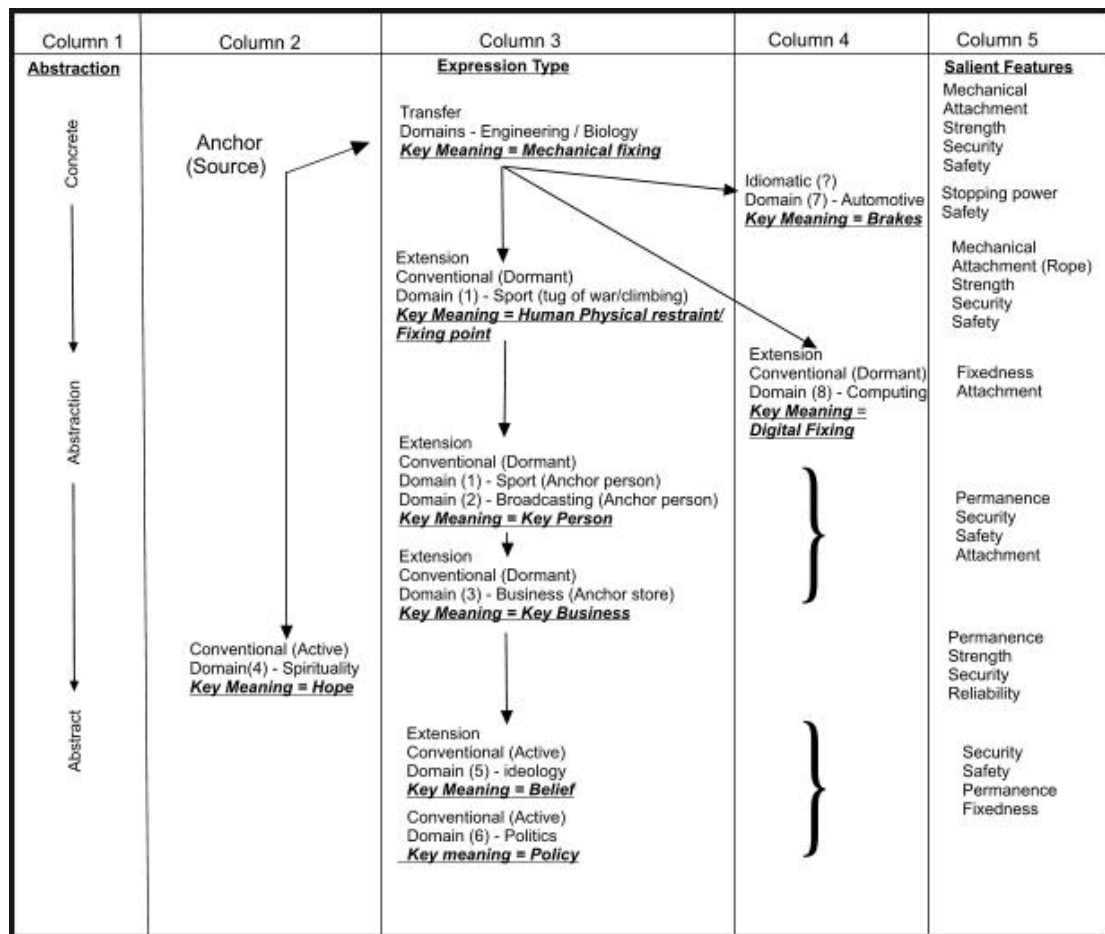

And in TV broadcasting:

a person who presents and coordinates a live television or radio programme involving other contributors. (ODP) where the key meaning is key person who provides (non-physical) team stability, which is an extension of the original ANCHOR MAN metaphor, but carries a new meaning and is thus a different metaphor.

Figure 15, below, shows the key features of metaphoricity for ANCHOR, how the salient features of ANCHOR relate to the different metaphorical realisations, and the key meanings for each expression.

Working from left to right, Figure 15 shows, in column 1, the level of abstraction for each realisation; the further down the diagram an expression is, the more abstract it becomes. Column 2 shows the source term ANCHOR and the arrows indicate the meaning paths being followed. Thus there is a direct path to the transferred use of ANCHOR that leads to other concrete applications in the domain of engineering and biology, where the key meaning remains effectively unchanged from the source meaning of ‘mechanical fixing’.

A second direct path leads to the wholly abstract sense of the anchor as a symbol of hope in the domain of spirituality. This does not seem to be an extension of the transferred uses shown in column 3. Although this is a well-established use, its expression is often poetic and it remains an active conventionalisation.

In column 3, direct paths can be traced to extended meanings in different domains, where the meanings are closely related but move increasingly towards abstraction.

The extensions show subtle changes in meaning, moving towards increasing abstraction, from inanimate mechanical anchoring devices to human beings providing physical anchorage in sports such as tug-of-war or climbing, where slightly different salient features can be mapped (column 5). In these human usages, the saliency of a ship's anchor is actually strengthened by the presence of the rope attaching the participants, much as a ship's anchor is attached by rope/chain to a vessel.

TV and sports anchors are human participants who are not physically attached, but play a central or key role in the stability and performance of the team and its activities; the meaning changes to one of keyness within an operation, an idea that is further extended into the concept of ANCHOR businesses and from there to ideological beliefs, political policies and strategies, which act as central or vital elements within political strategies or belief systems. I have categorised these completely abstract realisations as active conventionalised metaphors because their expression in texts can be highly variable and inventive. The schematic presented here does not allow for detailed descriptions of individual cases and it is accepted that such classifications are probably over-generalised.

In Column 4, there are two further expressions shown; the first (Anchors = Brakes) is classified, somewhat tentatively, as idiomatic. It does not appear to be an extension of other uses of ANCHOR and carries a very different, though still concrete meaning, from the other extensions shown, and only maps with two of the salient features of a literal anchor, one of which (stopping power) must be regarded as only a secondary and possibly aberrant function of an anchor. The fixedness of the expression, which is only found in the plural form, and its structural similarities with synonymous expressions using the word 'brakes', (see 5.6.1(i) p227), with which it shares colligational patterns, suggest that it is idiomatic.

Compare for instance:

	I think maybe she jammed the anchors on , because the car didn't sail out into space or anything.' (BNC/HWL).
with
	Most people naively imagine they will stop immediately when they jam on the brakes (BNC/K5C)
and I stood on my anchors and the BMW's much-vaunted braking system came good.
with
	The driver, travelling at some eighty kilometres per hour, had little alternative but to stand on the brakes and swing the bus hard right. (BNC/GOL).

However, the presence of maritime collocates in three out of seven examples in the BNC suggest that it still carries maritime resonances, furthermore, the transparency of ANCHOR as a maritime word militates against this classification.

The final realisation is the use of ANCHOR in computing. This is more than simply a transfer of the physical attachment usage into a new domain, because of the fundamental difference in the nature of the digital medium it is used in. The expression exploits the salient feature of fixedness and attachment, but other features are not exploited. There is no collocational evidence of the exploitation of maritime resonances,, so that this might be regarded as idiomatic, other than the transparency of ANCHOR, which is further enhanced by the use of the  symbol as a standard graphic image in computing, which is a forcible reminder of the source concept.

Table 6, below, sets out examples of ANCHOR metaphors along with dictionary definitions, and outlines possible mappings of MCMs activated by the various usages. The first five rows show the source term and its dictionary definitions taken from the MMD. The rest of the table shows the analysis for each of the main realisations found in the corpus data.

Column 1 shows the status of each realisation from the literal source as found in the MTC and the OED, through the modern dictionary definitions and the various realisations found in the MTC and the BNC. For each target expression it also shows the degree of metaphoricity. Column 2 indicates whether the process is one of expansion (<) or contraction (>) of meaning from the original source term. Column 3 provides citations of actual usage taken from the MTC and the BNC, as well as current dictionary definitions as found in the MMD. Column 4 shows the domain(s) each realisation occurs in. Column 5 gives the key meanings for each realisation. Column 6 lists the salient features of the source that are being exploited in the target expression. Column 7 suggests maritime conceptual metaphors that are being evoked and finally column 8 shows the level of transparency/opacity of each expression.

²³ Note that ANCHOR MAN has a range of uses, from its original maritime use, where it referred to the man in charge of the ship's anchor (OED, 2013), to the figurative exploitations listed here. There is a clear developmental path through the mechanical job of anchoring a tug-of-war team or climbing party (note the salient feature of physical attachment through a rope/ anchor chain) to the abstract ideas of anchoring a sports team, as a key player providing security/ stability in a game, or in an even more abstract senses of providing a sense of permanence /security for a broadcast or a business. Particularly in its broadcasting use, 'man' appears to be optional.

By contrast with the complexity shown in Table 6, Table 7 (below) describes the ME 'TAKEN ABACK', which is an opaque, idiomaticised expression where the source meaning and the secondary figurative meaning no longer exist side by side. The source has all but disappeared and the usage has narrowed to a single, figurative meaning; only the specific salient features of surprise and being stopped by an external force are exploited. The technical, maritime use is now extremely rare and only likely to be found in the highly specialised discourse of wind sailors.

²⁴ Note however, that although instances of 'Anchor Store/Business' do not appear to exploit maritime resonances in the data from the BNC, there are a number of related MEs used in this commercial, business context e.g. 'Flagship Company', 'Captain of Industry', and a number of 'Buoyancy' metaphors (See Ch.4 AFLOAT), etc., which reinforce the MCMs listed here.

3.4 Summary

These parameters are put forward as the prime descriptors for words that are likely to be used as metaphors and can be used to test the list of MEs found in the MTC. They describe the level of metaphoricity they encompass and can reveal the process of metaphorisation they have undergone, from literal/technical maritime usage to figurative use in the general discourse community.

Using the criteria from the examples shown in Figure 15 and Table 6, and Table 7, it is possible to draw up a set of simple tests for each ME, which can provide a useful description of its metaphorical use and its place within the map of maritime conceptual metaphors and consequently its place within the overall scheme of conceptual metaphors.

Table 8 summarises the various features of metaphor that are considered in categorising MEs, based on a series of simple tests.

The key features of each classification can be summarised as follows:

1. Transfer
 - a. Move from source domain to new domain
 - b. No change in Key Meaning.
 - c. Not regarded as metaphorical.
 - d. May map onto maritime conceptual metaphor

- e. May be member of group of transferred terms where target domain adopts source terminology.

For example. Maritime → Aviation uses, as with: ABEAM, (FORE AND) AFT, ASTERN, CABIN, PILOT, PORT, RUDDER, STARBOARD etc. (See 5.5 p205 ff)

Maritime use:

Before that they had fore and aft canvas set, but on rounding the South Foreland, the wind being ahead, they took it in, and went down under steam only. (MTC/ N/LT/15)

Aviation Use:

Standard controls are a single wheel on a fixed left-side-only or throw-over yoke pivoting fore-and-aft on a centreline pillar; but as it is partly intended for training G-DHCB has twin control wheels at either end of a Y-shaped structure. (BNC/BNV)

2. Innovative²⁵

- a. Domain change
- b. Key Meaning change (Extension)
- c. New, unconventional, ad hoc usage.
- d. Not predictable
- e. Meaning(s) will not be listed in dictionary
- f. Source and target are polysemous
- g. Salient features are specifically (and sometimes idiosyncratically) selected.
- h. Relies on generic context, sub-text and co-text for interpretation
- i. May exploit resonances from source domain in extended metaphors

For example, the specific use of WASHED ASHORE in this citation from the BNC: (See 5.6.2)

Most of you, I assume, already know what Viz is about. But in the event you washed ashore even more recently than I, you'll be delighted to know that Viz is about farts, tits and gonads (BNC/ABS)

3. Conventionalised (Dormant):

- a. Domain Change
- b. Key Meaning Change (Extension)
- c. Key Meaning will be listed as secondary sense in dictionary.
- d. Source and target are polysemous
- e. Salient features of source exploited

²⁵ Innovative expressions are very rare in the data examined in this study; where they are found, they are dealt with within the analysis of the individual entries for each ME in Chapter 5.

- f. Resonances unlikely to be exploited
- g. Knowledge of source is not required or evoked to interpret target
- h. Usually semi-opaque (meaning can be reconstructed without knowledge of source meaning, but may be erroneous in detail)

For example: RUN AGROUND (See 5.6.7):

Any attempt to frame a definition along these lines, however, would run aground because, although such a definition could be made fairly general, it would not discriminate sharply enough to provide a guarantee of hyponymy.
(BNC/FAC)

4. Conventionalised (Active)

- a. Domain Change
- b. Key Meaning Change (Extension)
- c. Key Meaning will be listed as secondary sense in dictionary
- d. Source and target are polysemous
- e. Salient features will be exploited
- f. Resonances exploited through collocation and colligation
- g. Extended maritime metaphors likely in co-text
- h. Transparent.

For example: THROW OVERBOARD (See 5.6.10):

All these odd trappings of a salvaged life, he thought.
All these bits and pieces washed ashore.
After Karen left, I lightened my life - threw things overboard.
What did I keep?
Some things of hers; some things of mine. (BNC/FP7)

5. Idiomaticised:

- a. Domain Change
- b. Key Meaning Change (Extension)
- c. Key Meaning established as primary sense in dictionary
- d. May be fixed or restricted in form both collocationally and colligationally.
- e. Metaphorical form may be distinct from primary form.
- f. Source may no longer be extant
- g. Source and target are homonymous
- h. Resonance with source not exploited
- i. Salient features of Source not consciously exploited
- j. Opaque (Source cannot be reconstructed from current expression)
- k. May map onto conceptual maritime metaphor

For example: COME ALONGSIDE (See 5.7.1):

The demand, which followed a similar plea from Granada chief Gerry Robinson last week, came alongside news that Carlton had boosted profits by 15% to £102.3m in the year to end September. (BNC/CBD)

6. Resonators

- a. Not specifically figurative expressions
- b. Domain change not essential
- c. Transparent
- d. Use perceived generic features of source domain for stylistic effect
- e. May be invented or corrupted versions of genuine MEs

For example: AVAST (See 5.8.2)

Avast, ye swabs,' she shouted, astonished by the hoarseness of her voice, 'belay yeselves an' man the mizzen-mast. 'TIS a stormy course for Far Tortuga we're sailin' an' the cap'n'll not rest easy at the bottom of the sea 'til the treasure be ours!' (BNC/GVL)

Metaphorical strength

There is a cline from literal usage to strongly metaphorical expressions, which can be described in terms of distance between the source and target terms. Distance can be gauged through saliency and resonance between source and target. The key measure of metaphoricity is saliency. Salient conceptual/perceptual features of metaphors are those features that are perceived to most strongly align between source and target terms. According to Hanks (2006:22), salient features are the selected properties of the source term that are perceived to be key to the meaning of the target use. Hanks suggests that the fewer matching salient features there are, the more metaphorical the target is considered to be, as the 'semantic distance' between source and target increases.

As an example, in Table 6, above, the metaphorical use of ANCHOR MAN, in the context of a tug-of-war team or mountaineering, shares five salient features with the source ANCHOR, including the very specific sense of physical attachment using a rope. The semantic distance between source and target is therefore very small and the parallels between the source and target are easily discerned. On the other hand, a television news ANCHOR MAN shares fewer salient features with the source concept of ANCHOR; there is no physical attachment and no physical entity represented by the television programme being 'anchored', it can be argued, therefore, that this use of ANCHOR MAN is more strongly metaphorical than the sporting usage.

The use of ANCHOR in the context of computing exploits only two salient features of the source, 'fixedness' and 'attachment', which, in this context, are not physical properties but the consequence of digital programming on a digitally constructed, non-physical page; the semantic distance between source and target is therefore much greater and the expression exhibits stronger metaphoricity than either of the ANCHOR MAN metaphors.

Resonance provides a form of cohesion whereby an expression can be related to its maritime roots through references within the co-text. Active and innovative metaphors exploit resonances where dormant and idiomatic expressions do not, as they are not relying on the maritime context of the source to give meaning to the target.

Thus, in this study, maritime metaphors are regarded as expressing new meanings through the exploitation of the salient features and resonances of the original source expression and applying them in new domains or discourses. These uses range from simple transference of meaning to a new domain, without any change in key meaning, to varying levels of extension of meaning, where the exploitation of resonances may be explicit and inventive, in innovative and active conventionalised metaphors, or lost, in dormant and idiomatic expressions where the secondary (target) meaning is so well established that the source is sublimated and no longer relevant to the interpretation of the expression for the great majority of users.

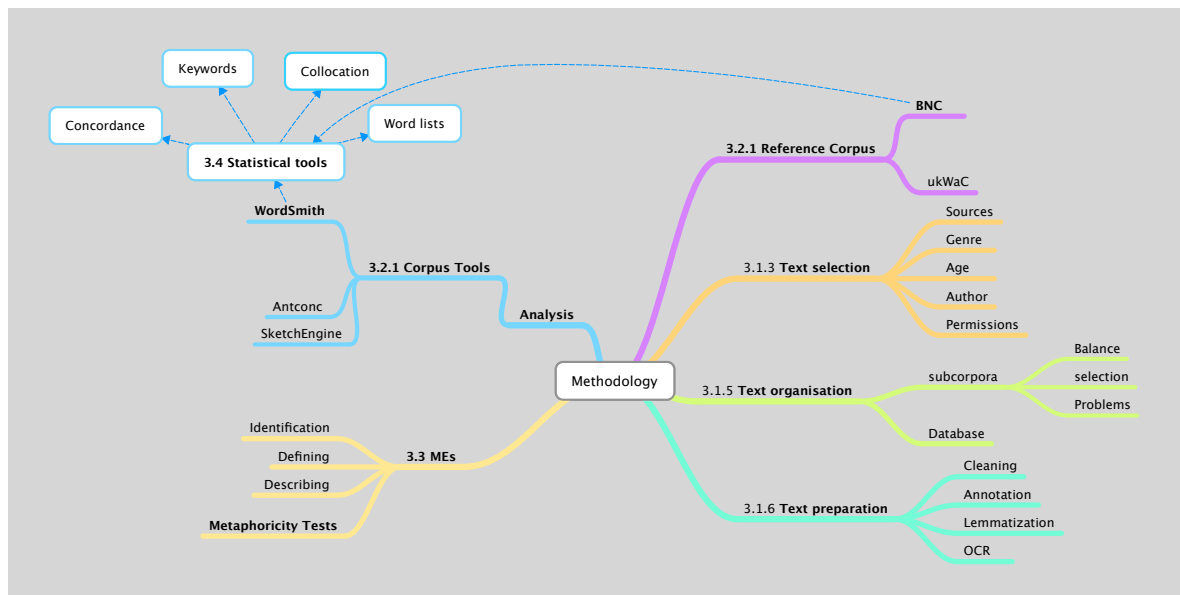

Most of these metaphors, and particularly the dormant and idiomaticised expressions, express maritime conceptual metaphors (see also 6.3.1) that have been specifically shaped by Britain's maritime history and its effect on our culture and language. Thus they express not merely that LIFE IS A JOURNEY but, more specifically, that LIFE IS A SEA VOYAGE, that POLITICS AND ECONOMICS ARE AN OCEAN and that ENTERPRISES AND STATES ARE SHIPS, with all the attendant navigational hazards of shoals, reefs, tides and weather that such conditions entail.

Chapter Four addresses the issues around the construction of the MTC and the methodology used to analyse the data produced by the corpus.

4 Methodology

This methodology section is in five main parts; Section 1 provides an overview of the MTC and will cover the selection of texts and their organisation, and the construction processes of the MTC project. Section 2 focuses on the corpus tools and the corpus methodology, starting with a description of the Reference Corpus and the Pilot Corpus. Section 3 describes the extraction of data from the corpora, and the processes used in the identification, selection and description of MEs and includes an account of the tests used to assess metaphoricity as discussed in detail in Chapter 2. Section 4 is a detailed description of the statistical tools used in the analysis and Section 5 outlines the tests applied to the data to assess the metaphoricity of MEs. Figure 16, below provides a schematic for the key areas covered in this chapter.

4.1 Constructing the MTC

4.1.1 The corpus

The MTC is a specialised diachronic corpus of written ‘Maritime’ texts that have a clear and unequivocal connection to maritime themes and subjects, across a range of genres. The corpus comprises 346 digitised, written texts, organised into seven subcorpora, taken from a variety of on-line and off-line resources, totalling in excess of 8.8 million words (See Appendix A1-2: MTC Indexes, for full account of texts by subcorpus and Appendix A1-3 Corpus Texts Database, for detailed bibliographical and source data on all texts). Table 9, below, shows the total number of running words (Tokens) and the number of different words (Types) in each subcorpus (See 2.1 for a full explanation of these terms). The composition of the subcorpora is discussed in 4.1.2.1.

Table 9: MTC: Texts, Tokens and Types

Subcorpus	No of Texts	Tokens	Types

WebTexts	64	399,765	20,097
Total	346	854,2561

The texts date from the late eighteenth century to the present day. The MTC is not intended to be a general corpus of natural language, but rather, a highly specialised corpus of texts from a particular discourse. It is designed to provide data for the analysis of a specific linguistic register (Halliday and Hasan, 1976), ‘Maritime English’, in order to identify and describe MEs, that is, fixed expressions (Moon, 1998) that have developed from their original highly specialised use by English-speaking seafarers, to become embedded in Standard English.

The decision to focus on written texts is primarily a pragmatic one that recognises the immediate availability of very large quantities of text in already digitized formats that do not require the additional layers of processing and transcription that the analysis of the spoken word requires. Furthermore, accurate records of the spoken word are not accessible when dealing with diachronic data. We have no mechanical recordings of the spoken word prior to 1877, when Edison invented the phonograph and the earliest recordings are very rare and can hardly be said to be representative of natural, spontaneous speech. Even now, while there are a number of substantial corpora of spoken English available to the researcher (see for example the UCREL website (UCREL, 2011) and David Lee's 'Bookmarks for Corpus-based Linguistics' (Lee, 2010), they can capture only a tiny fraction of the data required to produce any truly representative sample of spoken language; as Hunston (2002:29) puts it:

'Spoken language exists in unknowable quantities and in an unknowable range of varieties. How then is a corpus builder to 'represent' the diversity in a meaningful way?

The collection and transcription of spoken language is a costly and time-consuming process and, although there are now collections of transcribed spoken language available through on-line resources such as the BBC, these are still very restricted and much of the language is scripted rather than natural language. Furthermore transcripts are only available for a limited range of programmes and for limited time periods through those programmes' websites (BBC, 2011). Searching the BBC website for suitable material that could be usefully classified as 'maritime conversation' would be a very time consuming exercise for minimal returns, in terms of the amount of material likely to be gained. A decision was therefore made to restrict the data in the MTC to written English for this study. Although there is certainly an interesting study to be done on the prevalence of maritime expressions in modern spoken English, this is not the place for it.

In the MTC, the nearest we have to spoken-word data appears in the Song subcorpus (See 4.1.2.1 below). The songs in the subcorpus are generally from an oral tradition, and in the case of the sea shanties, were often extemporised and passed on from sailor to sailor purely by word of mouth, only collected and written down retrospectively, usually by collectors who, with the notable exception of Hugill (1994, 1969), were not themselves shanty men. These songs probably come closer to the natural spoken language of the sailors of the period than most sources, although, as Hugill puts it, when describing certain songs:

Nevertheless the solo parts were indecent and a large amount of camouflaging was necessary before this song could be made decent.

Furthermore, shanties are highly stylized and formalised and, despite the on-the-spot improvisations that undoubtedly took place when the songs were delivered, they cannot be regarded as examples of spontaneous speech.

Other than these sources, we are reliant on the accuracy, or lack of it, of contemporary writers such as Marryat, in their representations of spoken language, and the reconstructions of the language by modern writers. That such sources are untrustworthy is shown by the comments of the writers themselves:

I have adhered closely to fact in every particular, and endeavoured to give each thing its true character. In so doing, I have been obliged occasionally to use strong and coarse expressions, and in some cases to give scenes that may be painful to nice feelings; but I have very carefully avoided doing so, whenever I have not felt them essential to giving the true character of a scene

Modern writers of historical maritime fiction have to rely on historical documents and the reproduced vernacular of contemporary writers such as Marryat or Dana, who, as noted above, would sanitise the language to make it fit for their readership. Inevitably, contemporary journals and letters by the likes of Aaron Thomas (Thomas, 1798) were the work of educated, literate men, for the most part and hardly representative of the general class of common seamen and, again, tended to be aware of, and anxious to avoid, what they regarded as the coarseness and profanity of the average sailor's spoken words:

In thee O god, I will rejoice And to thy praises, raise my voice Towards thy glory, my thoughts I'll bend And to thy fame, my acts shall tend No Swearing words, my Tongue shall say But praise thee it shall;

Thus, other than the Songs subcorpus, speech is only represented in the work of novelists and reporters either inventing or reporting the words of others, there are no direct transcriptions in the corpus.

The size of the corpus is also limited by practical considerations of the availability of different text-types. There are, for instance, many hundreds of modern (post 1930) books written about the sea, both fiction and non-fiction, but copyright restrictions severely limit what it has been possible to include in the MTC. On the other hand, the free availability of digitised, out-of-copyright texts from on-line resources such as Project Gutenberg means that historical, that is pre-1930, texts, both in fiction and non-fiction, have been relatively easy to procure. This has led to issues of balance within the corpus, with some subcorpora being very much larger than others. This will be discussed in more detail in section 4.1.2 below.

In order to test the structure and usability of the corpus and assess the various corpus analysis software tools under consideration, a Pilot Corpus was also built and this process is described in section 4.2.3

4.1.2 Organising the Corpus

The corpus has been split into subcorpora, based on the text types included in the corpus. Organising the corpus in this way allows us to select and analyse specific types of texts and to make comparisons of data from different genres, sources or time periods. This could also be done by indexing the corpus texts to identify a range of attributes that could then be selected for by a search engine, when building queries (Scott and Tribble, 2006). However, for the purposes of this study such sophistication is unwarranted. The subcorpora reflect the sources, dates and types of texts represented within the MTC.

Organising the texts into subcorpora makes it possible to look at the balance and representativeness of the corpus as a whole. McEnery et al suggest that:

A balanced corpus usually covers a wide range of text categories which are supposed to be representative of the language or language variety under consideration. (2006:16)

However, questions of balance and representativeness of corpora are somewhat vexed. Balance and representativeness are determined by the purpose of the corpus; to achieve balance, a knowledge of the available material is essential in order to understand what material to include and omit; we look at categorising texts and then attempt to build subcorpora of equal size for each text type (Hunston 2002:28); however, as McEnery points out:

...any claim of balance is largely an act of faith rather than a statement of fact (2006:16).

This question is discussed in more detail in 4.1.3.1 below.

4.1.2.1 The Subcorpora

The MTC subcorpora are designed to reflect the main areas of possible maritime influence on Standard English. These areas were originally identified as Spoken Word, Books, Journals and Diaries, Newspapers, Parliamentary Papers and Speeches, Song and Verse and, in the twentieth and twenty-first century, Film, Radio, Television and the Internet. As discussed above (4.1.1), spoken word has been excluded from the corpus, while issues of copyright and availability have militated against the inclusion of radio, television and film scripts in the corpus. Thus the subcorpora have been organised as per Table 10, below:

Table 10: The MTC Subcorpora

Subcorpus	Text type	Source	Date Written
Historical Fiction	Novels and Short Stories	On-line sources: mainly, but not exclusively downloaded from Project Gutenberg	All Pre -1930. Earliest text: 1748

Table 10 provides a broad outline of the contents of the subcorpora²⁶, while Table 9 (p96) provides a breakdown of numbers of texts and relative sizes of the subcorpora. Assigning texts to particular subcorpora is not always straightforward and there are areas where a text might reasonably fit into two or more categories. In particular, news texts may include transcripts of complete reports, such as the serialisation in The Times newspaper, of the findings of the court of enquiry into the loss of the Steamship 'London', in 1866. This report might have been placed in the Historical Non-Fiction subcorpus, which contains other official reports of a similar nature, including the official report to parliament, on the loss of the Titanic. However, because of the serialisation and the inclusion of editorial comment and the fact that there are also various 'Letters to the Editor' on the subject in the same paper, it seemed appropriate to keep all these texts together.

4.1.3 The Text Selection and Downloading Processes

Selecting texts for a corpus is a balance of what is ideally desirable as representative of the text types required for the study and pragmatic decisions about what is available to the researcher in a usable format for inclusion in the corpus. Hunston, in discussing the make-up of a monitor corpus, talks of sacrificing:

... 'what is desirable' (adding to a general corpus from all of its component registers every year) to 'what is feasible' developing a corpus that is restricted in terms of register but expansive in size and currency). (2002:p31)

Some texts may be available but require considerable processing before they can be used, while others may require permissions from publishers or agents, entailing detailed agreements of conditions of usage, before they can be incorporated. Such considerations have a direct influence on the range of texts and the organisational choices made in the construction of the corpus.

For the MTC, a set of criteria was decided on prior to commencing the collection process, in line with Sinclair's recommendations (2005:4); texts must be:

1. Maritime, as defined in 2.2.1
2. Complete; texts are complete entities rather than extracts from longer texts²⁷.
3. Authentic i.e. not composed specifically for the corpus
4. Legally and freely available on-line, for download or available from publishers, with appropriate permissions.

The corpus is divided into subcorpora on the basis of generic features of the texts such as purpose, audience, form, source and date (For a more detailed account see 4.1.2 below).

The text types in the MTC fall broadly into the categories outlined in Table 11 above. These categories will be further described in the following sections.

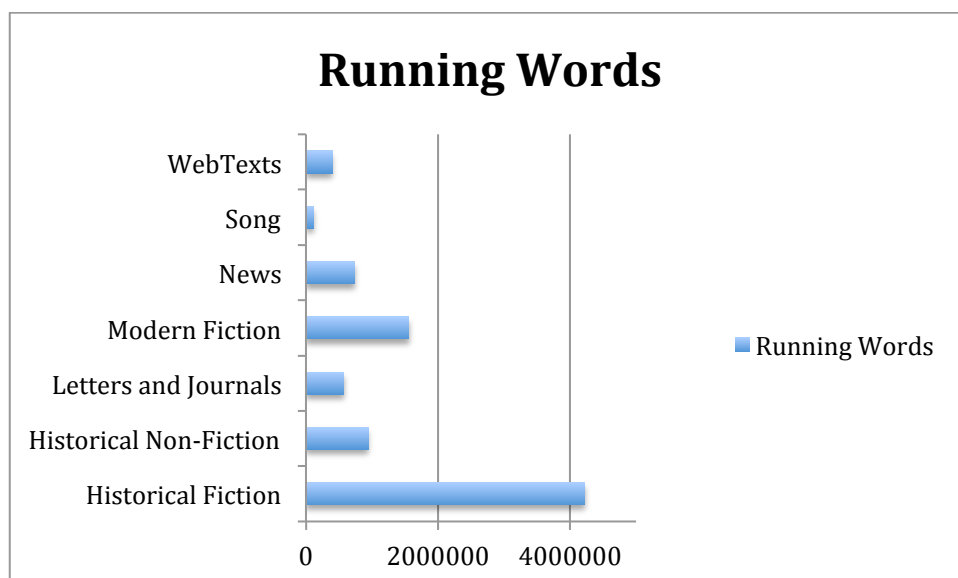

Each text is checked prior to inclusion in the corpus to ensure that it meets the minimum requirements to be classified as a maritime text, i.e. 'having a theme that has the sea at its core as either protagonist or setting' and that it was originally written in English, and is not a translation and, where texts are down-loaded from the internet, is complete and by random sampling of pages, is an accurate transcription of the original text that does not contain typographical errors or missing sections. For a full discussion of what 'maritime text' means in this study, see 2.2.1 p45. Here we are concerned with how such texts are sourced and selected. As all texts need to be in digitised, electronic format there are only two practical sources of such texts available, either from on-line resources or directly from the publishers of such texts. As Table 11 (above) illustrates, the range of text-types required for the corpus is wide and the sources of such texts are very varied.

4.1.3.1 Questions of Balance and Representation

Any selection of texts is a sample. Whether or not a sample is 'representative', however depends first of all on the extent to which it is selected from the range of text types in the target population. (Biber, 1993:243)

The MTC poses questions of representativeness (Biber, 1993, Sinclair, 2005) and how balance can be achieved in the corpus, given the somewhat ad hoc nature of manual searching and, in particular, the inevitable imbalance between freely available historical texts from web archives such as Project Gutenberg and the much more limited availability of modern (post 1930) texts still in copyright (Figure 17, below). Furthermore, the natural length of different text-types also militates against balance, as can be seen in Figure 17, when comparing the Song corpus (166 texts: 114,177 tokens) with the Historical Fiction corpus (37 texts: 4,224,540 tokens). As Atkins et al. remark:

We have found any corpus - however 'unbalanced'- to be a source of information and indeed inspiration. Knowing that your corpus is unbalanced is what counts. (1992:6)

Perhaps the most obvious point of imbalance is that between the Modern Fiction and Historical Fiction subcorpora. The restricted availability of modern texts, that is texts written post 1930, due, principally to copyright considerations, means that the Modern Fiction corpus is necessarily much smaller than, ideally, I would have liked it to be.

As a key purpose of the MTC is to sample authentic maritime language, it is, as discussed in 4.1.1 above, the historical texts that have the advantage of being contemporary, while the Modern Fiction texts are, for the most part, inevitably, reconstructions of a language variety that, to a large extent, no longer exists in the modern maritime discourse. Moreover, if we look at the number of lexical types in each corpus (Figure 18), we see that the Historical Fiction corpus contributes markedly more types to the MTC than does the Modern Text corpus, even though the 'Modern Fiction' category encompasses works set across a time span dating from Tudor England to the present day. A more detailed account of the texts in each of the subcorpora is given in 4.1.5, below.

As there is an imbalance in the subcorpora with regard to the numbers of texts and words, the question of representativeness also needs addressing. The song corpus contains a high proportion of the 'known' traditional sea-song repertoire, but, as is discussed later in 4.1.5.8, there is no such thing as a definitive version of a traditional song, and sea shanties are particularly difficult to pin down in this respect, with numerous versions of every song extant within the tradition today. However, although the details may differ from song to song, the range of lexis is surprisingly limited when compared to the other genres represented in the MTC. The average text in the Song corpus is only 690 words and, as can be seen from Figure 18, below, the number of types, that is, different words, is notably lower than in the other subcorpora, reflecting the repetitive nature of the songs and shanties, with their extensive choruses and refrains. This would suggest that the Song corpus is certainly representative of the maritime song genre.

Similarly, the WebTexts corpus is made up of a great many, generally small texts, ironically perhaps, considering that the arguments in favour of 'web as corpus' (Kilgariff and Grefenstette, 2003, Lew, 2009) are based on the sheer volume of words available. However, specifically maritime material on the net, that is not subsumed under the criteria of the other subcorpora in the MTC, is somewhat limited, thus the total number of tokens is just under 400,000, or about ten per cent of the size of the Historical Fiction corpus. However, the number of lexical types is also very limited, suggesting that the range of lexis in such writings is relatively narrow. As there are proportionately more texts in WebTexts, than in any of the other subcorpora, except Historical Fiction, and those texts span a wider range of text types than any of the other sub corpora, it again seems reasonable to claim that the collection is representative of the genre.

The texts in the MTC have been selected to be representative of various text types, that is fictional stories, press reports, letters, journals and so forth, within the maritime discourse. It is clear however, that, merely by the omission of spoken word texts, the corpus cannot be regarded as representative of the total discourse. Written language can only ever represent a tiny fraction of any living discourse. The inclusion of a high percentage of fictional texts from contemporary eighteenth and nineteenth century sources, such as Marryat, and Smollett gives some indication of the style of speech of mariners of the time, but cannot compensate for the lack of genuine spoken data.

While it is impossible to claim true representativeness of a language, or even, of a specialised variety such as Maritime English, it is reasonable to strive for representativeness within the various subcorpora. This has been achieved through the search and selection processes as outlined in 4.1.4 below.

4.1.4 Search and selection processes

Initial searches for texts were carried out using the search-engine, Google (www.google.co.uk) and the on-line bookseller, Amazon (www.amazon.co.uk) to identify texts and authors. These initial Google searches also led to a number of specialised maritime web sites such as <http://www.boat-links.com/naut-lit.html>, often built by sailing enthusiasts or lovers of maritime history, writing or music (See Appendix 5- On-line Resources for a full list). These sites, in turn, have extensive links to, sometimes, hundreds of other sites specialising in every aspect of maritime activity and containing everything from book reviews to accounts of migrant voyages, shipping lists, maritime model-makers as well as a number of sites discussing the etymologies of maritime sayings. These links have proved an invaluable source of material for the MTC, for all text types.

As most of the texts in the MTC are taken from the internet, consideration was initially given to the implementation of automated web searches, set up to look for specific maritime terms or particular authors, as used in the construction of very large corpora, such as ukWaC (Ferraresi, 2007, Ferraresi et al., 2008, Baroni et al., 2009), which use the concept of 'Web as Corpus' (Kilgariff and Grefenstette, 2003, Lew, 2009), however, the complexities of designing 'web-crawling' software, (Ferraresi et al., 2008) and the difficulties of defining precisely what might constitute a 'maritime text' in terms that such software could use, would have entailed a deviation away from the aims of this study, which were not to attempt to design new software, but rather to work within the capabilities of existing resources and software, to construct a corpus using immediately accessible search engines and web archives. In this study, the world wide web is used as a source of texts with which to build a specialised corpus but is not treated as a corpus in itself to be mined for lexical data.

The main source for historical (pre-1930) texts was Project Gutenberg, where the Gutenberg search engine was used to locate appropriate texts. The searches were of two main types: 'generic', using a range of single-word terms such as SEA, MARITIME, NAUTICAL, PIRATE, NAVY, to identify maritime texts by their content and subject matter (see Table 7) and 'specific': searching for known maritime works by title or by author; these searches were frequently seeded from the search results obtained from Google and Amazon (see 4.1.4 above). The generic searches yielded excellent results, with the term SEA finding 30 sub-categories from three main categories: Sea, Seafaring, Sea Shore and 145 books from the subcategory of Sea Stories alone. The sub-category of Seafaring life - - Juvenile fiction yields 67 books, while the search term PIRATE yields 24 titles, and the term MARITIME yields only two texts on maritime law, one in German and one in Portuguese, NAUTICAL produces no records. This reflects the system of indexing of texts in Gutenberg and means that it is not possible to rely solely on generic searches. Inevitably the categories and subcategories are not exclusive and thus these numbers are not an accurate reflection of the actual number of appropriate texts available in the Gutenberg collection. Gutenberg collects its texts via individual contributors and transcribers, and may contain a number of versions of some texts, particularly of the better known works and authors, and there are therefore, duplicates and near duplicates in the catalogue, as well as different editions, as Figure 20, below, illustrates.

Of the eight results on this page, in the subcategory 'Seafaring Life', there are two versions of Dana's 'Two Years before the Mast' and two versions of Conrad's 'Mirror of the Sea'. Moreover, due to the way in which they are indexed in Gutenberg, texts may appear in several sub-categories; it is therefore imperative that each text is checked to avoid duplicates, particularly as books may appear under different titles, depending on the edition used and the transcribers providing the particular digitised version. When selecting a version of a particular text, choices are made based on the completeness of the metadata provided and the earliest edition available, if known. Where two texts appear to be identical, the later transcription is chosen, on the assumption that, in accordance with the avowed aims of Gutenberg, to continually improve the accuracy of transcription and the quality of the texts being published, the latest version will be the better transcription. The MTC is not intended to be a corpus of definitive texts, but fits in with the Gutenberg philosophy:

Project Gutenberg's goal is more about selecting books intended for the general public than providing authoritative editions. ...We put our sights on a goal to release etexts that are 99.9% accurate in the eyes of the general reader. (Lebert, 2010)

It should also be noted that, in Figure 20 (above), 'Mann' by Nettelbeck is a German text and therefore not eligible for inclusion in the MTC. A significant number of foreign language texts are listed with English titles in Gutenberg; theoretically these can be filtered out by stipulating English language only in the search parameters, however, as in this case, the filtering is not perfect, so that manual checking is needed.

The Gutenberg searches are augmented by searches using Google Books and Amazon when the bibliographical data for a text is incomplete and, in particular, for finding dates and places of publication. These searches can also help to find additional texts by a particular author, allowing for a more targeted search in Gutenberg, rather than relying purely on generic searches. The search facilities on these major internet resources are more flexible and are accessing much larger databases than Project Gutenberg's approximately 40,000 books (Hart, 2011), compared, for instance, with Google Books' estimated 7 million titles (Google, 2011). However, while both Google and Amazon provide access to full versions of texts on-line, these are at a price that would make their use prohibitive, and can only be read on-line; texts cannot be downloaded to print or converted into .pdf or .txt formats and therefore cannot be added to the corpus. The key advantage that Gutenberg has over these other sources is that the texts can be downloaded at no cost, in .txt format for incorporation into the MTC.

4.1.5 Classifying the Texts

This taxonomy is based on definitions of register and genre as discussed by Biber and Conrad (2009) Lee (2001), and others and informed by ideas of text typology as discussed by Biber (1989) and Atkins et al (1992).

4.1.5.1 Maritime Fiction –Historical

Books published prior to 1930 are generally now out of copyright and therefore freely available on various websites, the most prominent being Project Gutenberg, which as part of the Gutenberg Consortia, with various associated 'e-libraries, individuals and schools' (Cook, 2011), claims to have over 100,000 eBooks available for download. The texts are generally accompanied by full bibliographic information as well as additional metadata about the specific version(s) of the texts being presented. For this corpus, Gutenberg has been an invaluable resource, which has provided the MTC with over 3.5m words of text. In this study, these publications are termed 'Historical' as opposed to 'Modern' texts published post 1930.

These books encompass the writing of a number of highly regarded and very popular novelists, including Tobias Smollett (1721-71) Captain Frederick Marryat (1792-1848), WHG Kingston (1814-1880), Herman Melville (1819-1891) and Joseph Conrad (1857–1924). The stories tend to be set in the authors' own time periods and span a period of about 150 years.

These texts are especially important in that they are written in the vernacular of the period and the discourse communities that the writers themselves were a part of. Marryat, for instance, was a successful, highly regarded, serving naval officer 24 years, seeing action in the wars against France and America (McGovern, 2002:1012), thus his knowledge of the language and habits of seagoing men was intimate and complete. Similarly, Melville, writing a little later than Marryat, provides, as an American writer, a different but still pertinent linguistic perspective, as an experienced sailor and whaler-man. Conrad, although not a native English speaker, being Polish by birth, spent much of his adult life on British ships and understood perfectly the sailor's vernacular of the late 1800s.

The popularity of these books is an important factor in this study, which is, in part, about the mechanisms that led to MEs being transferred from the maritime discourse community to the general population. In particular, the fact that these books were popular with younger (especially male) readers, and, in the case of Kingston, were specifically written for that market, may have made the texts even more influential in familiarising those generations of educated, or at least literate, young men with a form of language they might otherwise not have encountered.

As discussed in 4.1.3.1 above, the availability of the complete works of these authors through web archive sites such as Project Gutenberg, means that the Historical Fiction Corpus is the largest of the subcorpora, which leads to questions of balance within the MTC and leads to questions about whether it is better to limit the size of the corpus to maintain balance or to follow Sinclair's preference (2004) for making the corpus as large as possible on the grounds that more data is always better than less. As will be seen in the analysis in Chapter 5, the influence of particular writers, such as Marryat and Conrad add an important dimension to the findings about usage and frequency in the corpus.

4.1.5.2 Maritime Non-fiction-Historical-(written pre 1930):

This category covers a wide variety of text types including biographies, diaries, essays, journals, histories, ships' logs and various types of official reports. These texts come from a variety of on-line sources including Project Gutenberg, and various maritime collections, including the websites of The National Maritime Museum at Greenwich (<http://www.nmm.ac.uk>) and the Merseyside Maritime Museum, Liverpool (<http://www.liverpoolmuseums.org.uk/maritime>), as well as collections held in various universities both in Britain and overseas. The texts were found using generic search terms as described previously (4.1.4) and additional searches were carried out for particularly significant historical maritime events, which led to documents such as the 1912 official report to Parliament: 'The Investigation into the loss of the Titanic', held in the House of Commons Parliamentary Papers Archive (Chaston, 1912).

Further material has come from the websites of various maritime organisations including Merchant Navy and Royal Navy sites, which often feature considerable archives of journals, diaries and personal memoirs relating to events both significant and mundane in the lives of seamen at the turn of the century and earlier. Various genealogical research websites have also proved very useful for providing material for the corpus as a number of them contain links to records of nineteenth century migration and personal histories of both sailors and migrants, along with official records of ships and news reports pertaining to these voyages (See Appendix 5).

The key value of such texts is that they are generally written by members of the discourse community that this study is specifically involved with and therefore reflect maritime language as actually used by seamen, rather than as imagined by writers recreating the language and events in retrospect.

4.1.5.3 Letters

Journals, diaries and collections of letters downloaded from Project Gutenberg and a variety of university and museum collections are included in the Letters subcorpus, as these represent a different genre from those in the Historical Fiction and Historical Non-fiction subcorpora. These are personal accounts, generally written in the first person and dating from the mid 1700s (The Barrington Papers) through to the mid 1900s. As texts they are often idiosyncratic, as in the case of the Journal of Aaron Thomas (1797), which contains lengthy passages written in a mixture of Portuguese and English, reflecting perhaps the multicultural world that sailors inhabited on board ship and the linguistic influences at work within the sailors' discourse community, that set them apart from their landlocked countrymen at home.

4.1.5.4 Maritime fiction - Modern (Post 1930)

This classification includes novels that represent a very popular genre that focuses on particular historical periods, with two main foci: The eighteenth/nineteenth century Napoleonic and American wars (Forester, Kent, Northcote-Parkinson, O'Brien, Pope, Woodman, and others) and the Second World War (Monsarrat, Reeman and others).

When selecting these texts, for the sake of representativeness of the genre, the period that the novels are set in was taken into consideration, as this influences the register and, in particular, the lexis used. Thus, for example, the work of C.S. Forester is represented by an omnibus collection, 'Captain Hornblower': a set of three novels set between 1800 and 1830, and 'The Ship', an account of a ship-to-ship action in the Second World War. Similarly, Douglas Reeman writes novels set in the Second World War, but also writes naval fiction of the Napoleonic Wars, under the nom de plume, Alexander Kent. Thus novels about both these periods are included in the corpus. Nicholas Monsarrat's famous Second World War novel, 'The Cruel Sea' is included in the corpus alongside a less well known two-volume work; 'The Master Mariner', which spans a period from the Spanish Armada to the 1950's.

Many of the modern writers are prolific and have produced extensive series of books, often based on a particular character: e.g. Douglas Reeman, also writing as Alexander Kent, has 63 titles, including over 30 books following the career of his character, Richard Bolitho (1756-1815), as well as numerous books about the Royal Navy in World War Two. Similarly, C.S. Forester's character, Horatio Hornblower (1776-1858), features in 11 novels, while Richard Woodman's Nathaniel Drinkwater (1762 – 1843) is a series of 14 books out of 43 maritime works, and Dudley Pope's characters, Ramage and Yorke, appear in 18 books and three books respectively. For the Modern Fiction subcorpus, no more than three titles from any specific series have been selected, working on the assumption that within these series, the writing style and use of language will remain consistent. If all the texts from a particular series were to be included in the corpus, the frequency data obtained might provide interesting insights into a particular author's favoured phrases, but would not necessarily reflect accurately the usage of the phrase in modern maritime fiction overall. The intention is to represent the range of linguistic styles and, in particular, the lexis that the writers use when working within particular sub-genres. Thus, for a writer such as Douglas Reeman, it is necessary to draw examples from his 27 maritime novels of World War Two as well as from the 'Bolitho' series mentioned above.

The key difference between the modern and historical fiction texts, as far as this study is concerned, is that these modern authors have to re-create a vernacular that they have no direct experience of, in the way that Smollett, Marryat or Conrad had. I was particularly interested to see how the modern use of MEs relates to the language of modern and historical texts, or indeed if there is any significant difference in the language recreated. The writers themselves are often very conscious of their role as perpetuators of a special linguistic variant and their books occasionally contain metalinguistic commentaries about particular expressions.

So these are the doldrums,' said Martin, coming on deck in his best coat, the coat worn for invitations to the cabin, and looking about the hot, lowering sky and the glassy sea with great satisfaction. 'I have always wanted to see them. [...]'

'And as for the doldrums,' Stephen went on, 'I believe you may perhaps misuse the term. As I understand it, in nautical language the doldrums are a condition, a state; not a region. They are analogous to tantrums. A child, and God help us a grown man alas, can be in the tantrums anywhere at all. Similarly a ship may be in the doldrums wherever she is long becalmed. I may be mistaken, but Captain Aubrey will certainly know.'

Captain Aubrey knew, but since they were his guests he contrived to agree with both, though inclining somewhat in the chaplain's favour: he conceived that from seamen's slang or cant doldrums was become a general word by land, used in Mr Martin's sense of what used to be called the variables.

(O'Brian, 1984:144-45)

These modern novels are all still in copyright, so that permission had to be gained from the publishers or the writers' agents. The permission request letters and copies of the agreements and permissions given are included in the Appendices. This process is often very drawn out; in one case taking over 12 months to obtain copies of the requested texts. It was particularly difficult to obtain permission to use certain targeted texts such as the work of Patrick O'Brian, possibly the most successful and prolific of the modern writers of maritime fiction, one of whose novels has recently (O'Brian, 1984) been made into a very successful film. Clearly the agents of O'Brian's estate are anxious to protect the writer's work, which has gained new popularity since the film's success. It is however, precisely this success and the writer's popularity that make these works so desirable in the corpus, as they are likely to be influential in the perpetuation of maritime language, which readers are less likely to encounter elsewhere. Furthermore, O'Brian is widely acknowledged as an expert in the use of the maritime vernacular, so that his work has prompted books (King et al., 2000) and articles about his use of maritime language (Farrell, 2009).

Difficulties also arise where an author is deceased and copyright is in the control of an agent of the author's estate, with restricted publishing rights being granted to particular publishers who then sub-let the rights to smaller distribution companies, some of whom jealously guard their rights as sole distributors of the texts, so that despite permissions being granted by the agents, they may be unwilling to provide digital media to researchers. Where this has been the case, I have obtained printed versions of the texts that I have publishers' permissions to use and have scanned and converted them into .txt format using OCR technology; an expensive and time-consuming process, and one which lacks the accuracy of using downloaded or electronically stored texts, so that some portions of the texts are inevitably lost due to scanning errors. The alternative process of manual transcription would be both too time consuming and too expensive for a study of this size. Generally, publishers have been very generous and provided texts free of charge, although Little, Brown Books charged for use of their material²⁸. Full details of the authors, publishers and formats of books are shown in Appendix 2.

The modern maritime fiction category of texts is not limited to novels but also encompasses short stories. Many of these are published on specialised maritime social networking websites such as Boat-links.com (<http://www.boat-links.com/naut-lit.html>) and GCaptain.com (<http://gcaptain.com/forum/professional-mariner-forum/>) as well as various creative writing sites. It is acknowledged here that the writing on sites such as these is unlikely to be as polished as that of professionally published authors, but the MTC is not about a particular aesthetic or literary view of writing, but rather about the way language is used within the genre and, as many of the stories on these sites are written by mariners rather than 'writers', such stories will perhaps, more accurately reflect the language of the discourse community.

4.1.5.5 Maritime Non-fiction- Modern

This category includes news articles, biographies and histories, but does not include academic articles on maritime subjects; academic registers have been extensively analysed in numerous other studies using corpora and need not be revisited here.

As with modern fiction, issues of copyright have had a critical effect on the size of the corpus, so that much of the very rich field of maritime non-fiction literature now available to the reader, and gaining in popularity, according to various publishing houses, is very difficult to obtain in .txt format. I have therefore looked to freely available on-line resources such as maritime museums and on-line collections as well as Weblogs and merchant navy and royal navy social networking websites, which publish extensive collections of archive materials along with personal accounts and memoirs.

4.1.5.6 Historical Maritime News Texts:

Newspapers and broadsheets would have reached people throughout the country and often carried eyewitness accounts, official reports and commentaries about great maritime events, as well as more mundane shipping and maritime trading news. The original intention was to use the British Library Nineteenth Century Digitised Newspaper collection (British Library, 2010) to provide historical news texts with a maritime theme. While finding such texts is relatively straightforward, as the collection is fully searchable using keywords, the presentation of the newspapers, as image (.pdf) files, make the majority of texts unusable, as the quality of reproduction is too poor to use OCR software to convert them into .txt files, as Figures 20 and 21 below illustrate:

Apart from the poor quality of the type-face, there are also significant difficulties for OCR programmes with eighteenth and early nineteenth century scripts that use the 'long' s /ſ or ꝛ, as the forms are indistinguishable from the modern 'short' S. The feature is present in nineteenth century newspapers until the 1820s, as Figure 20, above, from 1801 demonstrates. Below it (Figure 21) is the article as converted by ABBYY® Fine Reader 10 OCR software. While it is quite possible to reconstruct a single article such as this with careful proofing and correction, with very large quantities of text the task becomes too great to make these texts a practical resource.

One of the key difficulties with this material is how to identify relevant maritime texts. My initial approach had been to identify particular newspapers that would carry a high proportion of maritime news, assuming that papers based near the major seaports such as, in no particular order, Plymouth, Falmouth, Portsmouth, Southampton, Liverpool, Chatham and the Port of London would be particularly pertinent. These papers could then be put, in their entirety, into the corpus, on the basis that newspapers are 'colony texts' (Hoey, 2001) made up of disparate items, united by their co-existence in the publication, but with each member also being a text in its own right. The advantage of this approach would be that it obviates the need to identify specifically 'maritime' texts within the text colony and, at the same time, we might find MEs in articles that are not maritime, such as court reports, advertising material and market news for instance, but that have been influenced by the maritime discourse of the community that the papers serve.

The British Library Nineteenth Century Newspaper Collection would be the ideal resource for such a corpus but, as already discussed, the texts are not in a form that can easily be used. Fortunately, there are other websites and archives available that contain news texts that have already been transcribed or converted into usable text files. These were found by searching specifically for nineteenth century newspaper transcriptions using the Google search engine, which led to sites such as www.cultrans.com, which carries articles from 30 newspapers published in Cumberland and Westmorland, as well as The London Times, during the nineteenth and early twentieth century. All the articles on the website are indexed and the site is fully searchable by keyword. The articles are free to download and are presented in MSWord (.doc) format, which is easily saved as .txt for the corpus. Although entire newspapers are not transcribed, reports of specific events are presented, usually in sequence so that stories can be followed over extended periods of time, as shown by the 'Times' coverage of the loss of the steamship 'London' in 1866, which comprises 35 articles (61,236 words) published over a period of three months, including the original news reports, a detailed account, in serialised form, of the proceedings of the enquiry into the sinking, and letters to the editor concerning the event and its ramifications.

Of particular importance to the corpus is the inclusion of a nearly complete volume of the Naval Chronicle from 1806, published in the aftermath of the Battle of Trafalgar, and including extensive editorials and articles, sketches, detailed accounts of Lord Nelson's funeral, as well as letters to the Admiralty and despatches, reports of actions and details of a major enquiry into the running of the Royal Naval Dockyards. In total the publication exceeds 200,000 words of contemporary maritime language. The Naval Chronicle was a monthly journal published between 1799 and 1818 and provides much of the information used by modern writers of Naval Fiction from C.S. Forester to Patrick O'Brian and Richard Woodman, to provide plots and historical detail (Tracy, 1999).

The great advantage of using the Naval Chronicle is that it is available in digital form, having already been converted from the original volumes by the University of California, using OCR. However, as already discussed, OCR has considerable difficulty with texts of this age due to the poor quality image available. While, clearly a great deal of work has been done to 'tidy' the text, it is still far from perfect, with considerable portions of the text either missing or unintelligible. Moreover, part of the function of the Naval Chronicle was to announce the promotions and appointments as well as retirements and obituaries of naval personnel, and, in the particular volume downloaded to the MTC, there are also extensive lists of those attending Nelson's funeral, as well as highly detailed descriptions of every aspect of the funeral, including the decoration of the coffin and the clothes of the mourners.

The poor quality of much of the text and the extensive lists meant that I undertook extensive repair and cleaning work, including the removal of lists of names, and much of the description of Nelson's funeral, where it appeared in list form and did not form part of the narrative of the event. Text repair was done manually, by proofreading the entire document. The process took nearly two weeks to complete, but resulted in a text of 234,000 words being added to the corpus.

The restrictions imposed by the pragmatic considerations already discussed, mean that the newspaper subcorpus is smaller than was originally intended, and more restricted in scope; with the exception of the Naval Chronicle, it has not been possible to download full newspapers or select papers from specifically maritime regions of the country, so that the collection is based on the results of searches for specific 'maritime' items using selected search terms, generated from the initial word lists produced from the Pilot study as described in section 4.2.3 below.

The most modern news texts in the MTC date from the Second World War, with accounts of the loss of the Prince of Wales and Repulse battleships, in the Times from 1942. More recent news texts are well represented in the BNC reference corpus and are therefore not included in the MTC.

4.1.5.7 Parliamentary Texts:

Records of debates and parliamentary bills concerning maritime matters are available in digitised form from <http://www.parliament.uk> and the Hansard archives (<http://hansard.millbanksystems.com>). The Hansard texts (2011) provide a record of parliamentary language going back to 1805, which may provide evidence of the use of maritime language and MEs in the parliamentary discourse. Such records of debates might be expected to reflect the presence of naval men in parliament during the period of imperial expansion and the Napoleonic wars when the navy had a significant presence in parliament, including the Lords of the Admiralty, but also a number of sea captains who were anxious to promote the navy's case. The original intention in this study was to compile a specific parliamentary subcorpus, however, having carried out extensive searches of Hansard and related resources, it has proved impossible to isolate what might safely be classified as maritime texts. There is clearly an interesting investigation to be done into the prevalence of MEs in parliamentary discourse but this warrants a separate study. The few texts initially placed in this subcorpus have been relocated to the Historical Non-Fiction subcorpus

4.1.5.8 Song and Verse:

Sea shanties and sea songs, or 'forebitters', are generally part of an oral tradition that reflects the natural language of sailors during the nineteenth and early twentieth century (Doerflinger, 1951, Hugill, 1969), who have left little evidence elsewhere of their language. While many sea songs were written for formal performances and for theatrical entertainment, often reflecting the writer's somewhat romantic perceptions of sailors' lives, and designed for the 'refined' tastes of theatre-going audiences and family drawing rooms, true sea shanties were work-songs, sung at sea to help sailors as they performed the physically arduous and often monotonous daily tasks required on sailing ships, such as pumping, heaving at the capstan and hauling on ropes; all jobs that required rhythmical, unified effort. Thus the songs needed to be simple and regular in structure and expressed in language that all the seamen could readily understand and identify with.

Most shanties were, to a large extent, extemporised, expressing the concerns of the moment and the job in hand, but also keeping alive characters, incidents and practices common to the men that sung them. They passed from ship to ship and shantyman to shantyman, being modified and adapted as they went (Hugill 1969: Ch1), and were never sung on shore. Traditional forebitters were songs sung for entertainment by sailors while off-watch, so called because the sailors would, in fine weather, gather around the fore bitts in the bow of the ship, out of the way of the working watch, to relax and sing. These could be almost any type of song taken from any source, including the music halls or broadsheet ballads, and passed from ship to ship. Many of these songs also worked as shanties or were adapted from them, particularly those sung at the capstan or pumps (Hugill 1996:27).

A number of collectors (Doerflinger, 1951, Hugill, 1969, 1994, Smith and Ballantyne, 1888, Terry, 1921, 1926, Whall et al., 1986) have, over the last 100 years or so, collected and preserved many of these songs and today, with access to computers and the internet, they are available on-line in digitised form, thanks to the work of singers and enthusiasts of traditional music contributing to websites such as 'Digital Tradition' (www.mudcat.org.uk) and organisations such as Project Gutenberg, who are now publishing some of the original collections including Smith's book (1888) and Terry's two collections (1921, 1926). These have been put, in their entirety, in the Song subcorpus despite all three works containing considerable commentary on the songs and their backgrounds, but it is the songs themselves that make up the bulk of the text so these are better placed here.

The words of the shanties frequently include highly specialised lexis and references to peoples and places encountered by seamen on their travels, reflecting the often highly idiosyncratic pronunciation of place names and technical terminology, as well as loan words picked up from the other languages and cultures they came into contact with.

Finding the texts for this subcorpus is straightforward, however a number of decisions have had to be made about the forms of the songs and how to deal with issues such as refrains and choruses. Moreover, problems arise with the selection of particular versions of songs as, inevitably, with any product of an oral tradition, there is no such thing as definitive version of any of these songs and a great many different versions of nearly all of them, depending on the job in hand, the singers, the ships they were singing on, the memories of the shantymen and the nationalities making up the crews, the cargoes being carried, and even whether there were passengers on board the ship, particularly when they included women. Added to this are the problems for collectors transcribing songs in the days before mechanical recording was available, and the mistakes and misinterpretations occurring when songs are passed on by singers, who do not understand the references in the songs or the language being used, and ‘adapt’ the words in their efforts to make sense of what they have heard.

The key questions to be answered when preparing these texts for the corpus were:

- a. How to treat choruses and refrains?
- b. How many versions of songs to include?
- c. Which versions?

Shanties are essentially repetitive with, dependant on the form, refrains occurring in alternate lines within each verse, or as choruses at the end of each verse, or a combination of both styles, as in the shanty ‘Sacramento’ (sung to the tune of the song ‘Campdown Races’):

O, around Cape Horn we are bound to go
 To me Hoo-dah, to me hoo-dah
 Around Cape Horn through the sleet and snow
 To me hoo-dah, hoo-dah, day

Blow boys blow,
 For Californ-I-O
 There's plenty of gold so I've been told
 On the banks of the Sacramento.

(Hugill, 1994:96)

This version of the shanty has 18 verses, resulting in 54 occurrences of the phrase ‘to me hoo-dah’ and 18 repetitions of ‘hood-dah day’, as well as 18 iterations of the full chorus.

This pattern is very common and has implications for the way in which we treat these songs in the corpus. As a general principle of corpus linguistics, texts should not be altered or interfered with (Sinclair, 2004:154-155). The usual convention in songbooks and collections is to give the chorus and refrain structure in the first verse of the song and then omit them for the remaining verses, sometimes replacing them with place holders such as Ch or Refr, or etc., as in the example below:

1. I'll sing you a song of the fish of the sea.
Oh Rio.
I'll sing you a song of the fish of the sea
And we're bound for the Rio Grande.
Then away love, away,
'Way down Rio,
So fare ye well my pretty young gel.
For we're bound for the Rio Grande.
2. Sing good-bye to Sally, and good-bye to Sue,
Oh Rio, etc.
And you who are listening, good-bye to you.
And we're bound, etc.

Clearly these placeholders are not part of the original texts of the songs as they would have been sung, nor are the part-completed lines of the chorus. The decision was made therefore to restore the songs to their full form with complete choruses and refrains with each verse. This of course means that the shanties show very high frequencies of particular words that occur in the choruses and, because of the number of variants and the cross-pollination effect of the oral tradition, completely different shanties often share very similar choruses and refrains, so that particular expressions will be even more frequent.

To resolve the issues around the wide variation present in the songs, I have incorporated the available variants of each song into a single cumulative or 'definitive' version, although this produces a hybrid that in reality would never have been sung in that form, but which contains as much of the lexis of the variants as possible. Having said this, I have also taken care not to increase the number of iterations of the choruses and refrains beyond the 'natural' number of verses that the songs would normally contain. 'Sacramento', quoted above, is kept with only 18 iterations of the chorus and refrains, although it has two distinct sets of verses that have been collected, one being a somewhat earthy account of a sailor's shore-going activities and their consequences, and the other an account of the hardships of a voyage around Cape Horn, replete with technical details and sailor's slang, which, in the 'definitive' version produces a song with 25 verses.

It is the repetitiveness of phrases within these songs, both in the verses and choruses, along with simple tunes, that have helped to make them increasingly popular outside the maritime community, particularly with the folk music revival of the 1950s and 60s, and perhaps, especially with their inclusion in the BBC's, 'Singing Together' broadcasts for schools, starting in the late 1940s and continuing into the 1970s. This introduced millions of children throughout the country to folk songs, including sea shanties.

As the book covers in Figure 23 demonstrate, the maritime motif in these programmes was strong; of 14 songs listed in the two books, five are shanties (Chenery, 2011). The popularity of this genre is highly significant in the process of familiarising people with maritime language and maintaining a continuing perception of Britain as a maritime nation.

4.1.6 Text Preparation and Cleaning

Books supplied by publishers were made available in various formats, including secure digital downloads, digital versions on CD-ROM in MS Word format (.doc) and downloadable PDF files that then required conversion using OCR software. However, some publishers supplied digital files that were conversions from image files of the original texts using OCR technology and often contained errors. Conversion of MS Word files is relatively straightforward in that such files can be saved as .txt files and thus automatically converted into the required format, however there can be difficulties in certain texts with the application of MS Word 'smart' quotation marks and apostrophes, as well as hyphenation at line-breaks, being encoded in the .txt files as letters. Once such errors have been identified, it is generally a relatively straightforward process using MS Notepad's 'Find and Replace' function to apply corrections.

These texts often contain foreign words and use diacritics that OCR software can misinterpret and these too need to be identified and corrected. Another notable feature of many of the fictional texts in both the Modern Fiction and Historical Fiction subcorpora is the frequent use of non-conventional spellings to represent regional accents and idiosyncratic styles of speech in addition to the use of highly specialised lexis, all of which can cause difficulties for OCR software and require that the texts be carefully proof-read prior to inclusion in the corpora.

With these texts and with the texts from Project Gutenberg, decisions had to be made about ‘cleaning’ them of certain types of additional material that accompany the publication but are not part of the original texts. With Gutenberg texts, for instance, there are lengthy pre and post-ambles for every text, which provide information about the transcription and conditions of use of the text as well as information about Project Gutenberg itself. These generally amount to some 3,000 words that are removed prior to the text being included in the corpus. However, a copy of the Gutenberg general terms and conditions is included in Appendix 6 as a matter of courtesy to them and to provide proper acknowledgement of their role in making this work possible.

For the modern novels, the publishers provide the texts with all of the publisher’s metadata including prefaces, press reviews and listings of other titles. Once again a decision has been made to remove this material from the texts as not being part of the original work. All the texts are fully acknowledged in the Appendix A1-3 and texts within the corpus are tagged with the appropriate metadata to satisfy the requirements of the conditions of use specified by the publishers, so that any concordance lines or extracts can be properly identified by any corpus user.

4.1.6.1 Sample of clean-up process

The following is a breakdown of the steps taken to prepare texts for the Modern Fiction subcorpus, taken from my journal notes.

Text: CS Forester (1987) Captain Hornblower RN: Penguin Books; London

Converted from PDF using ABBYY Fine Reader 10 TM

Main Tasks:

- Removal of page headers (leave page numbers)
- Method: use find and replace command

- For Forester texts, headers will be omnibus title: <Captain Hornblower RN> and specific book title ie <Hornblower and the Atropos>, < The Happy Return> and <A Ship of The Line> showing on alternate pages.
- To avoid losing these phrases within the text (particularly in the case of ‘a ship of the line’) search will also be case sensitive. This, however, will not help with omnibus title ‘Captain Hornblower RN’.
- May be necessary to check all instances to ensure text is not compromised.
- Removal of publishers’ pre-ambls and post-ambls (advertising material) but retain author’s biographies and forewords.
- This is in line with treatment of Project Gutenberg texts.
- Check all corpus texts as further work may be necessary to clean up other texts and remove ‘boiler-plating’ to maintain consistency within the corpus.

Additional problems noted:

- Frequent misreading by OCR of ‘the’ as ‘die’
 - Find and replace function works well but problems with spacing, i.e. space needs to be inserted in find fields before the word to avoid inclusion of instances such as Studied and differentiation of correct occurrences of ‘die’ within the text.
- ‘little’ misread as ‘litde’ –all instances replaced
- Clearly other errors will exist in the text and further proofing will be required.

4.2 Corpus Tools and Methodology

4.2.1 Lemmatisation

As was noted in 2.1.2, words may have different inflexional forms within a text, for example, plurals and genitives for nouns e.g. MAN/man’s/men, DOG/dog’s/dogs, or tense indicators for verbs SIT/sitting/sat. While it might be argued that these are different words, for linguistic description purposes they are considered to be different word forms of a particular lemma. In this study, the lemma is denoted by the headword, that is, the uninflected form of the word. Thus ‘men’ is the plural word form of the lemma MAN* and ‘sitting’ and ‘sat’ are present-continuous and past forms of the lemma SIT*. Hunston (2002:18) points out that there is some debate over whether words in different word classes should be treated as separate lemma or word-forms of a single lemma. Thus, from the examples used above, MAN* (noun) may be regarded as a separate lemma from the verb MAN*, with its word forms ‘manned’ and ‘manning’, or similarly, DOG* (verb) with the inflected forms ‘dogged’,

'dogging', or, indeed the adjectival and adverbial forms DOGGED and DOGGEDLY or, in the case of SIT, the nominal form, SITTING.

Wordsmith Tools is able to lemmatise wordlists and collocation data, however, it cannot differentiate between word classes unless the corpus has been annotated with POS tagging. When using word lists and collocation data, it is generally more informative to see all the word forms that occur rather than using lemmatised lists where only the headword is shown for any particular lemma. I have therefore used the lemmatisation function sparingly other than when setting up searches for particular multi-word expressions using concordancing, where I want to find all the word forms associated with a particular ME. Where I have lemmatised word lists, this is made clear in the analysis. When referring to lemma, rather than a specific word form, I use the convention of capitalising the headword and adding an asterisk to indicate that all word forms of that lemma are included. Because the MTC is not POS tagged, all word forms and grammatical classifications are considered in analysing the data and decisions as to classification are made by analysing the context of each occurrence.

In Wordsmith, word forms may be searched for in a number of ways.

1. By entering a specific word form e.g. sitting, which will find all instances, including compounds such as 'sitting-room' e.g.:

3. Wordsmith's 'advanced search' function allows searches for a specific lemma within the context of another word or phrase. The word forms come from a lemma list²⁹ that provides all forms of the most common lemma in the English language, although it is by no means exhaustive. The list does not differentiate between word classes, as can be seen in the results for the lemma search MAN (the node), with the context word 'the' within three words to the left or right of it. The lemma search will not find part-words or compounds as is the case with the use of the asterisk in example 2, above, but should find all variants of MAN regardless of word class.

4.2.2 The Reference Corpus

The role of the reference corpus in this study is to provide a benchmark (Teubert and Čermáková, 2007:68) whereby we can measure the significance of deviations from 'normal' language use in the maritime discourse, as represented in the MTC (see 4.4.1 for a full account of statistical tools used). The reference corpus needs to be very large and representative of Standard English. For this study I have used the British National Corpus (BNC), a 100 million-word general English language corpus built between 1990 and 1994 to represent the range of written and spoken language deemed to be current at that time. A fuller account of the BNC is given in 2.1.1.3.

The reference corpus is used to generate a list of keywords and frequencies that can be compared with the key word list generated in the MTC. This will then highlight those words and expressions that are specialised maritime terms that appear relatively frequently within the maritime discourse but only rarely in the general discourse.

Although the BNC is supplied with its own analytical software (Xaira) the general design and encoding of the corpus is complex and not particularly user friendly. It was therefore decided to use WordSmith Tools (Scott, 2010), which can be used with both corpora and has a number of functions not available through the BNC software.

4.2.3 The Pilot Corpus

The pilot corpus was used as an initial, small-scale model for the MTC as a whole and to assess potential analytical tools that could be used to interrogate the corpus.

Texts were selected from the Historical Fiction and Non-Fiction subcorpora, composed mainly of texts downloaded from the Project Gutenberg website, to provide the widest range of text types (See Appendix A1-4). It contains 43 text files totalling 3,671,238 words.

Gutenberg texts were chosen for the pilot, as being immediately accessible without the need for publishers' permissions and being already in .txt format, so that little preparation of the texts, other than cleaning of metadata and so forth, was required before adding them to the corpus. The choices were made on pragmatic grounds, having searched Gutenberg for generic texts using search terms such as 'maritime stories', 'sea stories', 'nautical texts', 'naval history', etc. In addition, known maritime writers such as Maryatt, Melville, Conrad were searched for by name.

The pilot corpus was used to identify frequently occurring keywords words (Table 12, below) that were then used as search terms when exploring various web archives, such as Gutenberg and the British Library Nineteenth Century Newspaper Archive, for relevant maritime texts.

In Table 12, the Pilot Corpus Keyword List shows the lexical items that are, proportionately, significantly more frequent in the pilot corpus than in the BNC Reference Corpus (RC Freq.). The list has been cleaned of grammar words, proper nouns, such as names of places or characters and also of lemma that are not unambiguously maritime, such as (from the original list) REPLY, MEN, SIR, MR, CRY and various others. Although these words appear to be very 'key' in the corpus, when used as search terms, their applications would be too wide to be useful in pointing to specifically maritime texts.

As well as the need to generate search terms for the study, the pilot was also used to evaluate corpus structure and functionality by answering a number of questions as set out below.

4.2.3.1 Data files

- Are all files in appropriate format (.txt)? The various on-line resources used to provide texts generally offer a range of formats for downloading material, including .pdf, .doc and .txt. For the corpus, all texts need to be in .txt format and ideally in Unicode to ensure consistency. Files that are originally in formats other than .txt need to be converted and, particularly with .pdf files, it may be necessary to use OCR software to convert them to .txt before they can be added to the corpus.
- The corpus tools can also be used to ensure that data files are not corrupted and that all data is readable.
- Are any files duplicated? When downloading data from many different sources, particularly archive sites, it is possible that texts will appear under different titles and could therefore appear twice in the corpus, thus it is important to ensure that each file is unique both in name and content.
- Are all files appropriately labelled? Each text is held in a separate file the name of which provides a unique identifier, which is cross-referenced with the MTC texts database (MTD), which contains complete information on every text in the corpus. The information is enclosed within angled brackets < > so that it is not read by the software as part of the text itself.
- Cleaned of metadata: all texts need to have extraneous material that is not part of the original work, removed. This is particularly so in the case of texts taken from Project Gutenberg, which contain extensive information about Gutenberg and the transcription processes. The Pilot also identified other 'text cleaning' requirements, such as the removal of page headings and numbering, advertising material and other publisher's commercial information frequently found at the beginning and end of books (See 4.1.6 above)

4.2.3.2 Assessment of Corpus Tools

The pilot provides the opportunity to try out the various corpus analysis software options available.

4.2.3.2.1 AntConc (Anthony, 2011)

Working on Mac computers caused a number of issues of reliability, despite the claim that the software would work successfully on Mac or Windows platforms. When run on Windows there were also difficulties with the file formats being used for the MTC, and, again, there were stability issues, which ruled the software out as not being reliable enough for a study of this size.

4.2.3.2.2 The Sketch Engine (Kilgarriff et al., 2004)

The original interest in using the Sketch Engine software was its link with the ukWaC corpus. Once the decision had been made to use the BNC as the reference corpus, although the BNC is also available through Sketch Engine, there was little advantage in using the Sketch Engine because of a number of significant issues; in particular, the speed with which the MTC could be built in Sketch Engine, which requires the uploading of files individually, which then need to be POS tagged, and the fact that the software is web based, meaning that the corpus would be held online rather than on a local disc, with implications for accessibility and control, as well as the ongoing costs of maintaining the corpus through the Sketch Engine account.

While Sketch Engine has some very attractive features, such as the ability to provide Word Sketches and comparisons, as in Figure 24 (below), these functions can, although not so conveniently, be carried out using other software and without the limitations imposed by the Sketch Engine.

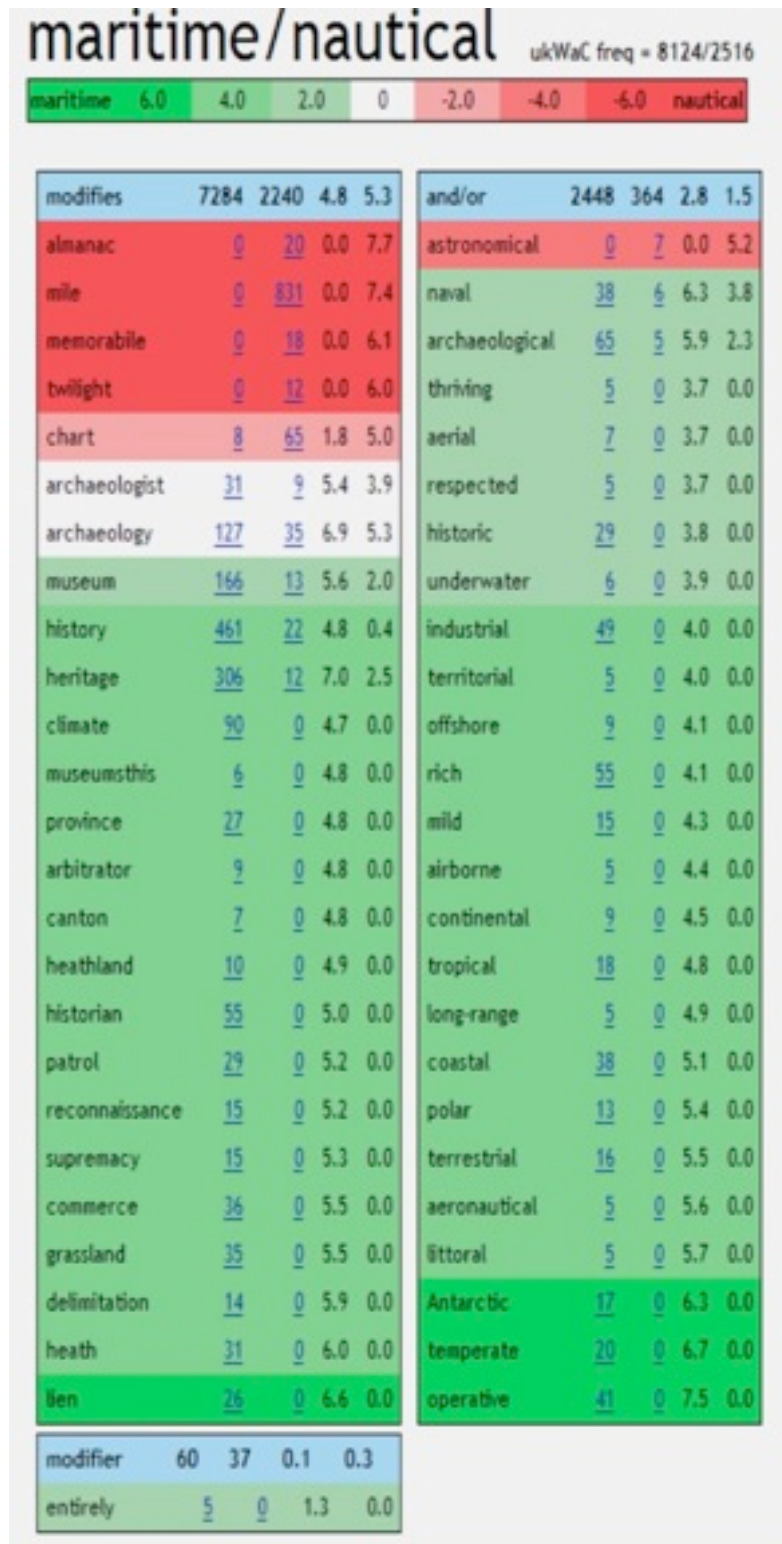

Figure 24 shows a Sketch Difference for MARITIME and NAUTICAL as they are found in the ukWaC corpus, where the shading represents the level of difference found between the two lemma, measured by their shared collocates. The graphic provides an instant impression of which of the two words collocates most widely, the level at which they can share collocates and those collocates that are unique to one word rather than the other.

The Word Sketch function relies on the corpora under investigation being POS tagged, thus requiring another level of tagging to be added to the MTC, which, as already discussed, I wanted to avoid in this study. Some experimental queries using MEs found in the BNC produced disappointing results, partially because of the requirement for POS labelling of query items, so that, for instance, see Figure 25, below, ABACK cannot be searched for, as the word itself is too rare to have been labelled, and the POS options when searching are limited to noun, verb or adjective.

However, as Figure 26 shows, the information tells us very little about ABACK, although it is possible to click on the word to view its concordance lines. Figure 26 shows just one of six panels of information displayed for TAKE. This requirement by Sketch Engine to display a specific POS for the item being searched for is a good illustration of Sinclair's strictures about the tagging of corpora imposing limitations, rather than opening the data up and allowing it to drive the research:

Of course one cosy consequence of using tagged text is that the description which produces the tags in the first place is not challenged- it is protected. The corpus data can only be observed through the tags; that is to say, anything the tags are not sensitive to will be missed (Sinclair, 2004:191).

The Sketch Engine limits enquiries to nouns, verbs and adjectives when drawing word sketches, so that adverbials, which may be highly significant, particularly when investigating idiomatic language, are made invisible.

4.2.3.2.3 Wordsmith Tools (Scott 2010)

This software provides the full set of tools required for this type of project with a relatively intuitive user interface and a comprehensive set of help files. It has a number of especially useful tools, including conversion software that makes downloading the XML based BNC straightforward and allows for the hiding of the BNC's XML tagging, which otherwise makes the running texts virtually unreadable.

WordSmith also makes the compilation of the corpus very straightforward and provides the tools for checking the integrity of the corpus, as well as for analysing its content. All results from queries run on either the MTC or the BNC are stored within the same filing system and are therefore easily available.

4.2.3.3 Query formation

Running queries through the pilot corpus provided information on the most useful and informative processes for analysing the texts. Furthermore, it allowed for adjustments to be made to the settings used in the analytical software for producing word lists, concordances, collocates and clusters.

The initial query task for the pilot was the generation of word lists and a key-word list, along with the establishment of data parameters, particularly when looking for multi-word expressions; settings such as lemmatisation and cluster recognition are critical to ensure that all versions of an expression will be found.

Figure 27 shows the setting options for defining clusters of words, that is, repeated strings of words that occur within the corpus. Here, the clusters are defined as occurring within three places to left or right of the node or target lemma and clusters must be within the limits of three to five words long and occur a minimum of five times to be listed.

4.3 Extracting the Data

4.3.1 The Maritime Expressions Database (MED)

When originally designing this study, I developed the Database of Maritime Expressions (MED) (Appendix 3), which comprises some 135 expressions that have been generally acknowledged, by various sources, (Green, 2009, Isil, 1996, Jeans, 2004, Jolly, 1999, Knight, 2003, Lundy, 2002, Rogers, 1985, Smyth, 1867) to be ‘maritime’ in origin, but which are now used in the general discourse in a more figurative way. This list, originally developed as part of my Master’s study (Isserlis, 2009) into selected MEs, was compiled over time as expressions came to my notice and is by no means exhaustive. Part of the original impetus behind this study was the desire to quantify and describe more fully these expressions, using empirical evidence from a substantial body of maritime material, rather than relying on the intuitive, albeit often well informed, speculation of various writers. This is not, however a ‘rigorous’ approach to quantifying and defining maritime expressions. For every expression called to mind and listed, there will be many more that will be missed altogether.

4.3.1.1 A worked example: ADDLE

To demonstrate the importance of empirical data when conducting this sort of research, I present here the results of a comparison between intuitively derived data taken from MED and empirical data from the MTC.

I initially compared the MTC keyword list and keyword cluster list with the expressions listed in MED to see if there were correlations. This immediately highlighted the pitfalls of working from a precompiled list of expressions. As an example, ADDLED was originally added to MED because of the claim by Jeans (2004:4) of its maritime origins; a claim that seems to be supported by the inclusion of the term in Smyth's 'Sailor's Word Book' published in 1867 and which is one of the texts that makes up the MTC. ADDLED does not appear in the keyword list. In fact the lemma (addle and addled) occurs only six times in the MTC and two of these come from Smyth's book.

According to Jeans (2004), ADDLE qualifies as an ME thus:

ADDLE: The seaman's name for water that had gone stale or putrid in the cask. This occurred so frequently that many ships carried large quantities of beer, which kept much longer than did fresh water. The expression came to mean muddled or confused, spoiled or rotten. From the Old English adela, liquid filth.

(Jeans, 2004:4)

This expression has been included in the analysis to illustrate the dangers of accepting at face value the judgements of writers as to the origins of MEs, based on intuition and a little research. There is no evidence in either the MTC or the BNC for any particular maritime connection for this lemma, other than the single reference from 'The Sailor's Word-Book' (Smyth, 1867) in Figure 28, Lines 1 & 2 (below), which is, presumably, Jeans' source.

2 putrid water in casks. ADDICE, an adze. Also the addled eggs of gulls and

5 a while. There was a great stir in his brain; an addled vision of bright
6 report to the Boss wren that one of her eggs is addled.' 'If she knew one

However, the OED (updated Nov 2010) gives the following definitions:

1. Urine; liquid dung; foul or stagnant water; slime, mire. Chiefly Eng. regional (chiefly south-west.) and Sc. in later use.
Freq. attrib., esp. in addle pool: a puddle of such water; spec. a pool containing the liquid that drains off a dungheap; a cesspool.
2. Of an egg: addled, rotten, putrid.
Recorded earliest, and now chiefly, in addle egg n.

These uses, with their roots in Old English, pre-date any maritime use, although there may well be a link between the agricultural language of the South West and the fact that the men of the West Country were exceptionally well represented in the navy and merchant marine, from at least the time of Drake, Raleigh and Hawkins. It is more than possible that the term was brought by such men from the land and used as Smyth, and then Jeans, describe. This does not, however, make it a specialised maritime word per se, but rather a word used generally on land and at sea.

This example alone is enough to demonstrate the desirability of a list of MEs generated from evidence rather than speculation. The MTC provides a data resource that can be effectively and efficiently analysed to provide a view of MEs as they have been used over an extended period and, through comparison with their use in the reference corpus, an accurate picture of current usage and their modern form and place in modern English can be demonstrated.

4.3.2 Using the MTC to Identify MES

The corpus approach to identifying expressions is very different to that described in 4.3.1, above. Here the data drives the investigation, so that words are ‘discovered’ by the software, rather than being selected by the researcher. The analysis takes place in Chapter 5, however, the various stages of the process are described here.

4.3.2.1 The MTC Keyword List

The first stage in analysing MEs is to establish that they are truly maritime. The real strength of the corpus approach is that we are not relying on intuitive methodologies but can take real data from real texts. The problem with it, on the other hand, is the sheer quantity of data that the corpus is likely to provide.

To identify potential expressions, the MTC was first analysed using WordSmith Tools to produce lists of key words, collocations and keyword clusters, based on the frequencies of particular words in the MTC, compared with their frequencies in the BNC reference corpus. The keyness of these expressions provides evidence of their specialised use within the corpus; a high keyness score suggests that the expression is proportionally more frequent in the maritime discourse, as reflected in the MTC, than in the non-specialised variety of English represented by the BNC. The MTC lemmatized keyword list totals 16,718 keywords, i.e. words that are significantly more frequent in the MTC than in the BNC reference corpus. These keywords provide the basis for the analysis.

4.3.3 THE MEs

With so many words to investigate, it is clearly not possible, in a study of this nature and size, to analyse in detail more than a small fraction of the available data. To avoid the possibility of 'cherry-picking', that is, selecting interesting (to me) or unusual examples of MEs for investigation, rather than addressing all of the available data, a decision was made to concentrate on a specific section of the keyword list, namely all the keywords commencing with 'A'.

Clearly, there are issues around the distribution of words across the alphabet and arguments may be made about the representativeness of such an alphabetically based selection. Landau (2001:360-361), in discussing the entry selection process for the compilation of dictionaries, cites Edward Thorndike's work, in the 1950s, on the distribution of words by initial letter in dictionaries, using a system of 105 'blocks' of words of approximately equal size, to ensure that entries are balanced alphabetically across the dictionary (See Figure 29, below)

Thorndike demonstrates clearly the uneven alphabetical distribution of lexical items in English, with the most highly represented letters taking up the greatest numbers of blocks. While, as Landau points out, there may be some changes in distribution over time, they are unlikely to have led to a significant alteration of these basic patterns. Similarly the distribution of starting letters across the MTC keyword list is assumed to be in similar proportions to that of the general lexicon for the purposes of this exercise.

Thorndike's table shows that 'A' represents six blocks, suggesting that as a group, the population of 'A' is slightly above the average of 4.4 blocks per letter. The largest groups being 'S' = 13 blocks, 'C' = 10 blocks and 'P' = 8 blocks and the smallest being 'J', 'K', 'Q' and 'XYZ' with one block each. This suggests that words commencing with 'A' will make a reasonably representative sample of the lexicon to analyse, being neither so big that there is too much data to analyse in a study of this nature, nor so small that the analysis becomes too limited to be able to generalise the findings across the complete keyword list. The selection is systematic and based on principles of lexical distribution, with an obvious path for future development, progressing through the list alphabetically.

Although the starting point for the analysis is to select keywords starting with 'A', the fact that words do not occur in isolation means that the number of MEs to be explored expands considerably as 'families' of expressions reveal themselves, as concordances, collocates and clusters are examined to identify patterns that might suggest membership of multi-word expressions instead of, or in addition to, their status as single-word MEs. Where it can be shown that single-word MEs are actually members of a larger family of expressions, the analysis continues with an exploration of the additional members of the group, so that a full picture of the ME and related expressions emerges.

A total of 16,718 words were identified as 'key' by WordSmith, however, a very high percentage will be key for reasons quite apart from the maritime nature of the texts. For the purposes of this study, only the top 9000 keywords (by keyness score)³⁰ have been analysed, in order to provide an adequate range of keywords starting with 'A'. In the top 9000, the range of keyness scores goes from 68,264 (SHIP), which occurs 18,593 times in the MTC or 2,100 times per million words (pmw), compared to 3,954 occurrences in the BNC (46 pmw), to 32 (WIVES) with 235 occurrences (27 pmw) in the MTC compared with 1,515 (18 pmw) in the BNC.

³⁰ See Appendix 4-2 for the full list

While the word SHIP is, as we might expect, very key in the maritime corpus, it is harder to say why the word WIVES should feature as a key word, albeit not particularly high scoring. WIVES, in many of these texts is probably a umbrella term. It almost certainly includes girlfriends, mistresses and port 'doxies', as well as genuine 'wives', who would be allowed on board when a ship was in port, when naval men would not be allowed on shore for fear of desertion. Hence the expression 'show a leg', used by boatswains calling men on deck for duty from the darkness below decks; smooth legs indicating a female in the hammock and not a seaman who should be on deck (Jeans 204:188). Partridge's Dictionary of Slang gives recorded from late 1818 orig. to make sure the at the occupant of the bed was male-not an illicit female bed-warmer. (2002)

Smyth simply defines the expression thus:

SHOW A LEG! An exclamation from the boatswain's mate, or master-at-arms, for people to show that they are awake on being called. Often 'Show a leg, and turn out.' (1867:622)

4.3.4 Cleaning the MTC Keyword List

Where the maritime connection of an expression is possible but doubtful, as with WIVES, concordance and collocation data from the MTC and the BNC is used to provide evidence for or against inclusion in the list.

A look at a random selection of concordance lines for WIVES, from the MTC, shows that 'WIVES and families' (Figure 30, below) feature strongly in maritime writing as one of the main preoccupations of sailors away from home, particularly in times of impressment, and also in journalistic writings about disasters at sea and the movements of both convict ships and immigrant ships.

Furthermore, a number of sea songs and shanties also focus on wives and sweethearts, with the word repeated in the choruses:

As discussed in 2.1.1.3, the adjective 'maritime' is used within this study to indicate core properties of an entity that link it unequivocally to the sea; it can be seen, from the example of WIVES, above, that keyness is only one feature of an expression that needs to be taken into consideration when deciding whether a word is maritime. It also needs to be demonstrated that the word's use is peculiar to the maritime discourse. Thus, although 'wives and sweethearts' is key in maritime texts and reveals an important element in the discourse, there are nearly 200 instances of combinations of wives and sweethearts/daughters/ families/ children/ lovers in the BNC, in a range of non-maritime contexts. The particular expression 'wives and sweethearts' occurs just three times, of which two are military, but not maritime, and one (L1) is from an article about nineteenth century gang culture.

Non-maritime-specific words, such as WIVES, are words that are key because their usage in the MTC reflects other aspects of the texts such as the period and/or the style and register, or themes and topics, such as separation from family, that are often features of maritime texts, but are not, of themselves, maritime (see appendix A4-2 for full list). These words need to be identified and removed as part of the cleaning process. Such words are generally not difficult to recognise in the keyword list, as Figure 32 below, illustrates.

This shows the first 15 words in the MTC keyword list in the process of being cleaned³¹. Words scored through are removed because they are non-lexical/grammatical (1), non-words (2, 5) proper nouns (3,6,10,11) or non-maritime-specific (8,9,13,14).

The list has been cleaned of all proper nouns, such as names of people, ships and places (116 words), the function words: A, also, am, and, as, at, and, most importantly, the non-maritime-specific lemma, totalling 316 words. As can be seen, the cleaning process removes a high proportion of the words originally listed as key by the software, which works purely on frequency data adjusted by log likelihood, to calculate the words that are characteristic of the texts. From a total of 492 keywords listed, commencing with 'A', the final list, after cleaning, has been reduced to just 61 keywords that are potentially 'maritime' and therefore require further analysis.

4.3.5 Multi-Word MEs

The analysis takes each expression identified in the keyword list and looks at concordances, collocations and cluster lists built from the MTC and the BNC to produce a picture of their original maritime and current usages. This data is also compared with entries from the OED and Smyth (1867) to provide a broader picture of original usage, and at least one ALD, either the MMD and/or the ODP to provide evidence of the most up-to-date usage. However, corpus evidence always has precedence over these other sources.

³¹ An Excel worksheet demonstrating the full cleaning process and showing all removed lemma can be found in Appendix A4 -3

Multi-word expressions are initially analysed under the headword of the phrase; i.e. the lemma that will form the node of the concordance lines. For example, in the ME, BROAD IN THE BEAM, the headword is deemed to be BEAM. This can then be modified using context searches and through the examination of cluster lists and collocate lists, where there is ambiguity about the form of the expression.

Note that when working with only a single section of the alphabet, keyness alone will not necessarily identify the headword of a particular expression, as with ABANDON SHIP, given here as an example. This is very clearly an established ME and an expression identified by Moon (1998:189) as an 'FEI' or 'fixed expression or idiom', but it fails to appear in our list of MEs commencing with 'A' because, although ABANDON is one of the top ten collocates of the word SHIP in the MTC, it is not a keyword in its own right; its relative frequency in the corpus is very much lower than its frequency in the BNC. In the MTC, the lemma appears 548 times, or 62 times per million words, compared to a frequency of 1,292 in the BNC, or 153 times per million words.

KEY: D = Domain change; F = figurative; L = Literal

However, when analysing the 'SHIP' family of expressions, ABANDON* (?) SHIP occurs 38 times in the MTC, all instances being literal uses of the phrase, compared with just 22 instances of the expression in the BNC (Figure 33), of which six are figurative uses (marked F), and a further three (D) show changes of domain from maritime to astronomical use (lines 1 & 2) or change of vessel from ship to sailboard in line 3.

These non-literal uses are the main focus of Chapter 5, where each ME is described in terms of its meaning, metaphoricity and the domains it is used in. The theoretical basis of the analysis of MEs, in terms of metaphoricity, has been discussed in detail in Chapter 3. The degree of metaphoricity and the processes by which technical, concrete maritime expressions become figurative are central to the analysis in Chapter 5; the model and tests for metaphoricity are therefore reviewed in the introduction to that chapter.

4.4 Statistical tools used in the study

In order to understand the relationships between words and phrases in the BNC and the MTC, and, in particular, the significance of keyword lists and collocations, a number of statistical tools have been used. WordSmith Tools provides access to various measures by which the 'keyness' of words and strength of collocations can be measured. This section will outline which of these tools were chosen and why; it does not attempt to explain the detail of the mathematical and statistical basis of the calculations involved; full explanations of the mathematical models and equations can be found in Oakes (Chs 2,3,4), McEnery (2006:52-58) and Scott (2010: On-line support documentation).

4.4.1 Keyness

The first measure to discuss is that of a word's 'keyness', which, in its simplest form can be described as that word's role in defining what a text is about:

keyness is a quality words may have in a given text or set of texts, suggesting that they are important, they reflect what the text is really about.

(Scott and Tribble, 2006:55)

In corpus linguistics, 'key words' are those words which, when comparison is made between two texts or two corpora, stand out as being more (or less) frequent in one than the other, thus helping to define the core subject of the text. Where a word is significantly more frequent, it is termed a positive keyword, while words that are significantly less frequent in one corpus than the other are termed as negative keywords.

In this study, we are using two corpora: the MTC, which is the smaller, specialised collection of maritime texts, and the BNC, which, at approximately 100 million words, is the reference corpus used to provide a sample of general English across a wide range of genres and text types, both written and spoken, with which we can make comparisons of language usage and measure the keyness of words and structures. Words that occur proportionately more frequently in the MTC than they do in the BNC, can be considered as key words.

The calculation of keyness is based on the frequency of the word in the given text(s), but raw frequency is not, of itself, an effective measure of keyness, in that the most frequent words in any text are likely to be grammatical words (Table 13, below), which tell the reader little about the subject matter.

Table 13 shows the top 20 most frequent words in the WebTexts subcorpus of the MTC, which are all grammar words. It tells us that the most frequent word is THE, which occurs 26,837 times, which is 6.7% of the total number of words in the 64 texts that make up 100% of the WebTexts subcorpus. In the BNC, THE accounts for 6.1% of the total number of words in the corpus. The first lexical item in WebTexts (SHIP) does not appear until 49th place in the list.

Keyness is a measure of the statistical significance of a word within the corpus when measured against that word's use in a general or reference corpus which is used to establish the norm.:

The basic principle is that a word-form which is repeated a lot within the text in question will be more likely to be key in it. In our case, it is simple verbatim repetition, allied to a statistical estimate of likelihood.

(Scott and Tribble, 2006:58)

The statistical measure is vital, as can be seen from the word frequency list, THE is, in Scott's words 'repeated a lot' in both WebTexts and the BNC, but this does not automatically make it a key word. In order to evaluate its keyness, the frequency needs to be calculated to show whether the word is proportionately more (or less) frequent in the MTC than it is in the reference corpus. Wordsmith Tools provides two statistical tools for the calculation of keyness: chi square and log likelihood, also known as G2, (Dunning, 1993). Both measures work on the principle of comparing the actual 'observed' frequencies of words in a text, or corpus, against 'expected' frequencies in a reference corpus and provide a measure of significance of that frequency; in this study, comparing the frequency of words in the MTC (8.8 million words) against their frequency in the BNC (100 million words).

The chi square measurement is based on the assumption that frequencies follow normal distribution patterns and, according to Oakes (1998:25), is regarded as an effective tool for analysing the keyness of words in shorter texts, but becomes less useful as texts increase in size and conform less to patterns of normal distribution (McEnery et al., 2006:55), where the measure may give unwarranted significance to very frequent words (Baron et al., 2009:46). Dunning (1993) proposed that because log-likelihood, a refinement of the chi square measurement, does not assume normal distribution of the data it provides a more reliable measure of keyness. On this basis, Scott (2010) selected the log-likelihood test for the calculation of keyness in the Wordsmith programme and similarly McEnery et al (2006:55) state a preference for this test in their work.

These factors led to the decision to base the keyword calculations on log likelihood, to cope with the scale of the data sets involved and improve the accuracy of the keyword lists. Owing to the nature of the study and the probability that some of the MEs being investigated would be rare, even in the MTC, the limits for keyword lists were set very wide with a maximum limit of 2000 keywords and a minimum frequency per text of 3. This would ensure that even the rarest MEs should be found. The probability (P) value was left at 0.000001, which is the default value set by WordSmith and ensures a high level of confidence in the validity of the list produced.

4.4.2 Collocates

According to McEnery et al (2006:56):

The term collocation refers to the characteristic co-occurrence of patterns of words, i.e., which words typically co-occur in corpus data.

As with the keyness measurement discussed above, statistical tools are used to measure the ‘typicality’ of collocations. It was demonstrated in Table 13, above, that the commonest words in any corpus are likely to be grammatical words and these will usually appear at the top of collocate lists as being the words most commonly found in proximity to lexical items. However, unless we are looking specifically for grammatical patterns (colligation), what we are interested in is the patterning of the lexical items within the text that give it meaning. Statistical tools can be used to sort the data by strength or significance of collocation.

Collocational significance is calculated using a variant of the Specific Mutual Information (MI) measurement that calculates the strength of collocation based on how strongly words are connected to the target word (node) within a given span of, in this study, five words either side of the node. The calculation is made by comparing the ‘expected’ frequency of words within the span, i.e. the frequencies found in the reference corpus (the BNC), with the actual or ‘observed’ frequencies found in the MTC. The resultant score is a measure of the strength of the link between the node word and the collocate, where the higher the score, the stronger the link and the lower the score, the more tenuous the relationship between the words. A score of 3.0, according to Hunston, (2002:71) can be regarded as good evidence of meaningful collocation. MI scores are calculated on the assumption that the words in the reference corpus are randomly distributed, or, as Hunston puts it:

‘... the MI-score measures the amount of non-randomness present when two words co-occur.’ (2007:71)

There is a problem, however, with MI scores, in that rare words in the corpus can gain unwarranted prominence in collocation lists as MI scores will tend to highlight rarer words that appear in limited collocations (Oakes 1998:171).

Table 14 (above) shows the top 15 collocates for BROADSIDE in the MTC, as sorted by MI score. Most of these are technical terms associated, as might be expected in a maritime corpus, with naval gunnery, however, MI tends to attribute strong associations to rarer items even though they may only appear infrequently, but always together. Thus in this list, six of the top 15 collocates are proper nouns, being the names of ships (Kearsage, Destiny, Sutherland, Cyclops) or their captains (Ramage, and Hornblower). These names only appear in single texts, but within each text are associated with the node word a number of times.

Recognising the tendency for MI to over-emphasise rare items, Daille (1995) experimented with the MI equation and developed MI3, which gives greater weight to more frequent items in the corpus and thus reduces the tendency for unusual lexical pairings to dominate the collocate list. Thus, in Table 15, the collocates for BROADSIDE include more of the technical terms that we might expect to find and only a single ship's name, (KEARSAGE), which appears because the text from which it comes (MTC/HNF/AB/ALA) is relatively short (5,465 words), so that the frequency of co-occurrence of the vessel's name and BROADSIDE within the text appears to be disproportionately high.

Having examined a number of words and their collocates as calculated by various tools, MI3 seems to offer an effective balance between over-emphasis of rare and unusual items and too much weight being given to grammatical words. This is therefore the measure that has been used for collocational data throughout the study.

The value of collocational data in this study is that it gives a clear picture of changes in use in different discourses, when the MTC and the BNC are compared. The collocation data for BROADSIDE in the BNC provides a very different picture from that provided by the MTC data. The MTC shows the maritime use of the term, where a BROADSIDE (N) is, without exception, the discharge of all the cannon on one side of a ship, the collocates are all technical maritime terms, with the exception of HER, which collocates strongly because of the maritime tradition of referring to vessels as female, e.g.

- 1 when a sea struck her larboard broadside, throwing her over
- 2 d care nothing for her and her broadside if the schooner was
- 3 n and lifted her and flung her broadside on just as she now
- 4 essed, would give her a raking broadside which would probabl
- 5 her, and No. 1 would bring her broadside to bear on her star

In the BNC (Table 16), the only collocate shared with the MTC in the top 15 is FIRE*:

The use of the term in the BNC is generally figurative, carrying the meaning of a verbal or political attack against a specific opponent or an idea:

- 1 China seems to be retreating into a diplomatic posture reminiscent of the Cultural Revolution, at odds with both Washington and Moscow, and firing frequent broadsides against all-comers for alleged interference in its internal affairs. (BNC/A95)
- 2 BILLY BINGHAM fired a broadside at Republic of Ireland counterpart Jack Charlton in a World Cup slanging match last night. (BNC/CEP)
- 3 Speaking on the future of international standards, Mr Collum fired a broadside at the International Accounting Standards Committee.
(BNC/CBX)
- 4 This kind of squabbling in the courts was most unseemly, and The Daily Mail launched an angry editorial broadside: 'There were cyclists on the jury, we read, and this fact has a grim sound... Steps should be taken to put these people down.' (BNC/EDE)

The top collocate in the BNC is BUCK'S, which refers to a column in a Rugby magazine, which delivers often scathing commentaries on the state of the game for its readers

- 5 BUCK'S BROADSIDE
The Five Nations brings serious domestic club competition to a standstill. But why? (BNC/CB2)
- 6 BUCK'S BROADSIDE
Arrogant delusions dispelled by the All Blacks and Wallabies, South Africa have a hard row to hoe to get back to the top.
(BNC/CHW)

In the MTC, BROADSIDE occurs 879 times compared to just 110 occurrences in the BNC. Of the BNC instances, just six are used in the sense of naval armaments, as found in the MTC. Smyth (1867) provides an excellent set of definitions, which also includes the use of the term for a form of news sheet:

BROADSIDE. The whole array, or the simultaneous discharge of the artillery on one side of a ship of war above and below. It also implies the whole of that side of a ship above the water which is situated between the bow and quarter, and is in a position nearly perpendicular to the horizon. Also, a name given to the old folio sheets whereon ballads and proclamations were printed of old (broad-sheet).
 BROADSIDE-ON. The whole side of a vessel; the opposite of 'end-on'.
 BROADSIDE WEIGHT OF METAL. The weight of iron which the guns of a ship can project, when single-shotted, from one side. (1867:137)

The OED uses Smyth's definitions but makes no reference to the figurative use of BROADSIDE as a verbal or written attack, whereas the MMD (2013) only gives this figurative meaning and makes no reference to any maritime meaning. The corpus approach gives the full range of meaning and nuance and allows one to see the development of the expression from its literal maritime origins to its current figurative, idiomatic sense as a noun, and also the development of the expression's use as an adverb, as it has transferred from the maritime domain into motoring and other domains in the general discourse:

- 7 On 22 June, a Saturday, about ten of us manhandled the Wilsons' caravan on to the Lecky Road, the main artery through the Bogside, and parked it broadside in the middle of the road, stopping all the traffic.

4.5 Summary

Chapter Four has described the methodology and tools used in the study, commencing with an overview of the corpus and a discussion (Section 4.1.1) of the rationale for the choices made in the design and construction of the MTC. Section 4.1.2 then discussed the organisation of the subcorpora, leading into a more detailed description of the texts (4.1.3) and how they contribute to the overall balance of the corpus. Section 4.1.6 provided an account of the processing of the texts for inclusion in the corpus and examined some of the challenges presented by the different text types being used.

Section 4.2 dealt briefly with the rationale for the choice of the BNC as reference corpus and its role in the study, while 4.2.3 discussed the Pilot Corpus and its role in the overall design process and, in particular, the rationale behind the choice of corpus analysis software.

Section 4.3 focussed on the methodology for extracting data from the corpora, the construction of the MTC keyword list (4.3.4) and the tools used to analyse metaphoricity.

Finally, Section 4.4 gave a brief account of the statistical tools used to analyse the data from the corpora and described the processes involved in identifying keywords and collocational data, before discussing the rationale for using a corpus approach and illustrating, through the example of the ME, BROADSIDE, the advantages over relying purely on dictionary sources for the analysis of MEs.

Chapter 5 describes the analysis itself and provides a detailed examination of the MEs from ABACK to AYE, AYE as revealed in the MTC. The MEs are described in detail, including form and usage and, in particular, their metaphorical forms and functions and how these map onto a system of MCMs that are a culturally specific expression of the overarching conceptual metaphors suggested by Lakoff and Johnson (2003).

5 The Analysis

5.1 Introduction

In Chapter 2.2.2, I defined an ME as:

A word or fixed phrase (a) originating within the maritime sphere of endeavour or (b) that has been adopted by the maritime discourse community so that it takes on a meaning far removed from its use outside of that community.

This chapter describes the detailed analysis of those expressions identified as MEs, using the MTC and the BNC to provide empirical evidence of usage to test whether they are actually true maritime expressions, and describes how these terms have moved from being used almost exclusively in the maritime discourse community as literal or technical terms, into common, usually figurative usages in modern English. It provides profiles for the expressions both in their original sense and their modern usage and, where applicable, demonstrates the processes of metaphorisation that they undergo. The expressions are described in terms of their metaphoricity, based on the model described in Chapter 2, which has been derived from the works of Hanks, Deignan, Moon, Lakoff and Johnson and Kovesces and the observable data derived from the MTC and the BNC.

5.1.1 The ME Keyword list

Table 17, below, provides a list of 61 keywords, commencing with the letter 'A', identified as potential MEs. As well as listing the keywords, the table also gives each ME a keyness score (a measure of its statistical significance in the MTC, when compared with the BNC reference corpus, based on log likelihood), its frequency in the MTC and in the BNC Reference corpus (N) and, more importantly, the number of words per million (Fr.) that that frequency represents in the corpus. Bearing in mind the difference in size of the two corpora (MTC = 8.8 M words; BNC = 100M words), this measure gives a clearer indication of the relative prominence of the words than raw frequencies alone provide. However, note that many of the words in the MTC are highly specialised and extremely rare in the general discourse and, in some cases, completely absent from the BNC.

The keyword list has been ordered by keyness score, frequency and alphabetical order and the analysis in 5.3 to 5.8 is also ordered this way, but is further organised into categories of MEs as described in 5.2, below.

The list has been lemmatised, that is, generally speaking, one word will represent all the inflectional forms of number and tense normally associated with that word, although there are specific examples in the list where maritime use is restricted to a particular form (e.g. AMIDSHIP / AMIDSHIPS), where all variants have been listed separately. In line with Hunston's (2002:18) practice, words such as ANCHOR, with both verbal and nominal forms are treated as separate lemmas in the analysis, as a key indicator of metaphoricity may be a change of word class in the transition from literal to figurative usage (Deignan, 2006:110ff).

³² Fr/M: frequency is expressed in words per million. This measure has been chosen as a clearer figure for comparing the frequencies of words in the two corpora than the percentages used by default in WordSmith Tools. When dealing with small numbers of words in very large corpora, the percentage figures become clumsy and difficult to interpret meaningfully.

³³ RC/ N = Reference Corpus Number, i.e. the number of occurrences (or raw frequency) of the word in the BNC. It is this, when compared with the number of occurrences in the MTC (N) (column 2) that produces the Keyword value in the Keyness column

5.2 Analysing Metaphoricity

The theoretical basis of metaphor analysis has been discussed in some detail in Chapter 3. Here, I briefly recapitulate the main features of metaphoricity and outline the tests used to classify the MEs.

The categories are based on a cline of metaphoricity (Figure 34) that takes into account various features of the MEs, such as, domain change, transparency, key meaning change, activity, resonance, saliency and increasing abstraction.

Inevitably, many expressions do not fall neatly into these apparently discrete categories and, particularly when considering active status and transparency, these are to some degree subjective judgements and there may be considerable blurring of boundaries. The categories are briefly defined as follows:

- Literal/Technical: The original source meaning or primary sense of the expression as used in its maritime context.
- Transfer: The expression retains its primary sense but is used in a different (non-maritime) domain.
- Innovative metaphors: 'Ad hoc' (Hanks 2006:17) extemporisations; they are wholly reliant on the selection of particular salient features of the source and depend on co-textual, contextual and generic clues for successful interpretation, having no previously established meaning. They may exploit unconventional resonances from the source domain.
- Conventionalised metaphors: These are established expressions with recognised secondary meanings that exist in parallel with the source meaning, which can be recovered and which may to a greater or lesser extent inform the user's understanding of the metaphor.
 - Active conventionalised metaphors are established secondary senses where the source and its salient features are easily recoverable and actively contribute to the user's understanding and may be exploited, particularly in the form of extended metaphors and explicit collocational/colligational resonances.
 - Dormant conventionalised metaphors: firmly established secondary senses where the source meaning may be recovered, but is not required for interpretation, such expressions do not exploit resonances from the source domain and will not engender extended metaphors.
- Idioms: Whereas innovative and conventionalised metaphors can be regarded as secondary senses (Hanks, 2006:18), idiomaticised expressions have become fixed primary senses; they are not reliant on the original source terms for their interpretation and, if the source expression is extant, the two terms will be regarded as homonymous, with no connection being recognised by most users between original source and target.
- Resonators: These are not usually used metaphorically, but rather to evoke a maritime theme or atmosphere and, in some instances, may become de-lexicalised:

For native speakers, the vast majority of everyday language is phraseological and involves a greater or lesser degree of delexicalisation. (Philip, 2007:3)

The specific meaning is lost or unrealised, so that an expression such as ‘AVAST, ME HEARTIES!’ is used solely for stylistic effect, perhaps glossed as a statement along the lines of ‘I am playing the part of a pirate captain.’, without either user or audience being required to understand or apply the actual meaning of AVAST as a command to cease hauling on a rope. Such expressions may be genuine MEs, but many are corruptions of maritime language or literary inventions. They are often used as clichéd expressions and are therefore classed here as a specific form of idiomatic expression, although note that, whereas idioms are regarded here as expressions with a primary meaning that no longer reflects maritime roots, resonators are selected specifically for their maritime resonances.

The MEs are identified through the keyword list, and then defined using concordance evidence from the corpora and through definitions taken from the OED and Smyth (1867), for etymologies and historical definitions, and the ALDs (MMD and ODP) for current usage. Having established this basic information on usage, each ME is tested for metaphoricity using the tests set out below.

Test 1: Is there domain change?

If ‘Yes’, the expression is a transfer, unless Test 2 is positive.

If ‘No’, the expression is a literal, technical ME

Test 2: Is there a change in Key meaning? (See 3.3.1.1) If Yes, the target is a metaphorical extension of the source. If there is no change, the expression is either a literal/ technical ME or, if Test 1 is positive, a Transfer.

Test 3: Is the source expression in current use?

If ‘Yes’, the target will be transparent, or at least semi-transparent and source and target are likely to be seen as polysemous expressions.

If ‘No’, the target is likely to be opaque and maritime resonances are unlikely to be exploited, suggesting idiomaticity.

Test 4: Are resonant collocational/ colligational features from the source present in the co-text of the target expression?

If such features are present and exploited, especially in extended metaphors, the expression will be a transparent, active conventionalised metaphor or an innovation.

- 1 And now the FA must decide whether they feel it is in everyone's best interests if they throw Taylor overboard into Boston harbour, just like the Yanks did 200 years ago to another unwanted English export. After this Boston tea party it will be a wonder if they can do anything else. (BNC/K3H)

In text 1, from a football report, the ME, THROW OVERBOARD works on a number of levels. Resonances are activated by the reference to Boston Harbour and the literal maritime use of THROW OVERBOARD, and to the Boston Tea Party, with its political and historical resonances with ancient rivalries. Thus, in this instance, the ME is being used as an active conventionalised metaphor. The ME evokes maritime resonances that allow the author to produce a multi layered meaning within the text unattainable with an alternative term such as 'dismiss' or 'sack'.

Where such resonances are absent, the ME is likely to be either a semi-transparent, dormant metaphor or an opaque, idiomaticised expression, especially when Test 3 is also negative.

- 2 'Thus although, from a technical point of view, the old system of division of labour is thrown overboard, it hangs on in the factory as a tradition handed down from manufacture, and is then systematically reproduced and fixed in a more hideous form by capital as a means of exploiting labour power. (BNC/FB5)

In text 2, taken from a political text book on Marxism, there is no exploitation of the resonances from the original maritime use of the ME, the expression is synonymous with 'rejected' or 'dispensed with' and is used idiomatically or, at least, as a dormant conventionalised metaphor, requiring no knowledge on the part of the author, or reader of its original meaning for its interpretation.

Test 5: Are salient features of the source explicitly exploited?

Salient conceptual/perceptual features of metaphors are those features that are perceived to most strongly align between source and target terms. According to Hanks (1996:20), most metaphors hinge on 'at least one striking salient cognitive feature' which 'is often the focus for a cluster of contributory but less salient features.'

High saliency, i.e. the close matching of a number of salient features in the target and source, suggests a shorter semantic distance between them and therefore weak metaphoricity. Such expressions will normally be transfers or transparent or semi-transparent active or dormant metaphors; for example:

Transfer:

WELCOME ABOARD (see 5.5.3.1 for full analysis)

Salient features of WELCOME ABOARD can be stated as –

- Fixed form declarative used in the maritime domain for
 - Formulaic granting permission for or formal acknowledgement of
 - boarding a (physical) ship
 - by officer/ authorised personnel
 - recognition of shared (physical) journey
 - acceptance into membership of group
 - recognition of shared (physical) destination
- 1 'Hi, Dick!' she called out merrily.
 'It's me.'
'Welcome aboard, Captain,' said the talking computer.
 'Good to have you with us again. (BNC/FNW)

In text 1, the domain and type of vessel changes from the original maritime usage to a space craft; the other salient features listed above remain essentially unchanged.

Low saliency, i.e. expressions where only a limited number of salient features are exploited, indicates a greater semantic distance. Such expressions are regarded as stronger metaphors that require greater effort on the part of the receiver to decode.

- 2 He says it's up to you to confirm the decision with your agreement.'
 'Well, partner?'
 Curtis grinned down at him.
 'I mean, th'champagne an' caviar kin wait fer now.
 Jes' a grateful 'welcome aboard, an' thanks fer steppin' into th'breach Ben, ol' pal', will do.
 Well, whaddaya say, partner?' (BNC/HJD)

Thus, in text 2, WELCOME ABOARD is a conventionalised dormant metaphor (see 5.6.4.4), or possibly even an idiomaticised expression, as there is no evidence of maritime resonances being exploited in the co-text. The 'vessel' is now an abstract idea of a partnership or team, similarly the shared journey and goals are abstract ideas rather than, or possibly in addition to, any physical journey. Note too that, colligationally, the nominalisation of the expression in text 2, also reduces the saliency of the expression, when compared to its use in text 1.

Test 6: Is the current form fixed, and different from the original source usage? If Yes, the expression is more likely to be idiomaticised.

Test 7: Is the secondary sense expressed by the ME more abstract than the source? Generally metaphors express abstract ideas through concrete images, thus the more abstract the idea is that is being expressed, the more metaphorical the expression may be.

Test 8: Is the expression used for stylistic effect rather than specific meaning? If yes, it is likely to be a resonator rather than a metaphor.

Table 18 is a simplified checklist, designed to quickly identify the main metaphorical features of an expression, based on the tests detailed above. The final two columns refer to the mapping of expressions as MCMs and overarching conceptual metaphors (CM). Details of such mappings, where applicable, are recorded in each profile.

Table 18: Tests for Metaphoricity

These tests are not comprehensive and numerous other factors may come into play, as discussed in Chapter 2. However, they provide an outline of key features of metaphoricity for the categorisation of MEs and provide a basis for more detailed discussion within each individual profile.

Table 19, (above), shows the categories of the MEs analysed in the study, based on the degree of metaphoricity they exhibit. The table is ordered by keyness and by BNC frequency scores. The BNC score has been selected as representing current usage in the general discourse, whereas the MTC score represents a more historical and specialised usage. Keyness scores are for single keywords rather than MEs. Multi-Word Expressions (MWEs) are not allocated a keyness score, and frequency data for MWEs is based on the actual number of occurrences rather than WPM.

5.2.1 The Analysis

Each of the categories, as outlined above, is examined in turn, with exemplars taken from the corpus data, in the form of profiles of selected MEs. Other ME's that fit into these categories are listed in a table at the end of each section.

Single word MEs are presented in order of keyness, within each category. MWEs are presented in order of total frequency in the two corpora.

Each example ME is analysed as follows:

- a) Statistical summary, which shows the number (N) of occurrences of the target expressions in the MTC and the BNC; the frequency (F) of occurrence per million words in the corpora; the 'keyness' figure (K) for the expression, where appropriate, and the Appendix reference number.
- b) Brief overview of definitions and etymologies using the latest version of the OED [Online] (2012, unless otherwise stated), Smyth (1867) and ALDs (Macmillan Online Dictionary (MMD) and Oxford Dictionary Pro [online] (ODP) as required.
- c) Discussion of data and conclusions, with particular reference to the literal and/or metaphorical status of the expression, assessed through the model proposed in Chapter 2 and the tests outlined in 5.2, where applicable, including any changes of form and/or word class.

Profiles for all MEs, including concordance and collocation data and dictionary citations, is contained in APPENDIX 2, where the expressions are listed in alphabetical order by headword.

A number of the MEs analysed in the following sections do not appear in the keyword list in Table 17 (p153) but are included because of their relationship to identified keywords. In particular, I have analysed a number of expressions related to the keyword ABOARD, which is a member of what might be regarded as the 'BOARD' family of expressions which is discussed in more detail in 5.6.4.

The analysis starts with words from the keyword list that are classified as Non-MEs, (5.3) followed by literal MEs that have not been adopted into the general discourse (5.4), before examining transferred expressions (5.5) conventionalised metaphors (5.6) and finally idiomaticised expressions (5.7) and resonators (5.8). I have not made a separate section for innovative metaphors, however, where examples occur of innovative uses of identified MEs within the data, they are dealt with within the entry for that specific ME.

Many expressions fall into a number of categories; where this is the case a full analysis will be carried out starting with the least metaphorical uses

5.3 Non-MEs

Non-MEs are expressions that appear as keywords in the MTC but owe their 'keyness' to factors such as the nature of the texts in which they appear, or other social/historical factors that are not specifically maritime. Many of these expressions, while not being maritime per se, form the root for expressions that have specific maritime usages. Where this is the case such usages are highlighted in the analysis and the resultant MEs are analysed in the appropriate section.

5.3.1 AWAY

MTC: N=8975; F=1027

BNC: N=41544; F=486

K=3498

Appendix 2.51

In the OED no specific reference is made to any maritime connection with the word, however, corpus analysis shows that, as the statistical summary above indicates, proportionally, AWAY is twice as frequent in the MTC as it is in the BNC, with a very high keyness score (ranked at number 8 in the keywords list (Table 17), suggesting that, while AWAY, may not be specifically maritime, it has particular maritime uses. Smyth gives five deck orders and expressions that are specifically maritime:

AWAY ALOFT. The order to the men in the rigging to start up.

AWAY OFF. At a distance, but in sight.

AWAY SHE GOES. The order to step out with the tackle fall. The cry when a vessel starts on the ways launching; also when a ship, having stowed her anchor, fills and makes sail.

AWAY THERE. The call for a boat's crew; as, 'away there! barge-men.'

AWAY WITH IT. The order to walk along briskly with a tackle fall, as catting the anchor, &c. (1867:63)

MEs based on AWAY are examined in the following sections:

CARRY AWAY (0)

STOW / STOWAWAY (0)

BOATS AWAY (5.6.13)

HEAVE / HAUL AWAY (5.8.4)

Appendix 2.49: Table 57 shows the top collocates in the MTC, after cleaning of grammar words and names of characters and places .

5.3.2 AMMUNITION

MTC: N=278; F=31.81

BNC: N=460; F=5.39

K= 433

Appendix 2.35

There is no suggestion in the OED that AMMUNITION has any specialised maritime meaning or significance. Smyth's definition makes no claim to any maritime specialisation:

AMMUNITION. This word had an infinite variety of meanings. It includes every description of warlike stores, comprehending not only the ordnance, but the powder, balls, bullets, cartridges, and equipments. (1867:36)

The word's high keyness rating comes from the subject matter of the texts in MTC, which, while representing the broad spectrum of maritime writing, is inevitably weighted towards stories and articles about war and adventure, as these have tended to be the key themes of maritime writing, whether in fiction, reportage or historical documents.

5.3.3 ARMAMENT

MTC: N=142; F=16.25

BNC: N=87; F=1

K=388

Appendix 2.41

While not a specifically maritime term, the OED definition emphasises a maritime connection that is borne out by the data in the MTC.

Armament, n,

1. A force military or (more usually) naval, equipped for war. Also fig.
1699—1866

2. Military equipments, munitions of war: spec. the great guns on board a man-of-war.
1721—1877

However, note that this definition has not been fully updated since the First Edition entry in 1885. Smyth also gives a mixed definition:

ARMAMENT. A naval or military force equipped for an expedition. The arming of a vessel or place.

In the MMD, ARMAMENT is defined as:

1. the process of providing members of the armed forces with weapons to fight in a war
2. Weapons and military equipment used by an army, navy, air force etc.

In the MTC, the term ARMAMENT is used quite specifically about particular types of weaponry:

- 1 The dynamos that charge the batteries are also the electric motors that drive her submerged, of course.'
Ned nodded and asked: 'What armament?'
'She carries fourteen torpedoes. Electric-driven, of course, not compressed air like ours, so they don't leave a trail of bubbles. Four tubes firing forward and one astern (MTC/ MF/DP/1)

In the BNC, the key meaning remains unchanged. Only seven instances of ARMAMENT in the BNC are specifically maritime. In the MTC, the maritime use of the term appears to be specialised and generally more specific than its use in the BNC, referring particularly to the guns on warships, bearing out the OED definition.

This is a borderline ME; despite the maritime specialisation suggested in the OED, the corpus evidence does not indicate that the modern use of ARMAMENT is particularly influenced by maritime origins.

5.3.4 ADVENTURER

MTC: N=130; F= 15

BNC; N=113; F=1.3

K=304

Appendix 2.14

The OED defines an ADVENTURER as:

1. A person who undertakes or invests in a commercial adventure or enterprise; one who ventures capital in some project, esp. trade or settlement; a speculator. With capital initial: a member of an association of such people established by royal charter or some other authority. Now hist. except as retained in the names of organizations.
2. A person who plays at games of chance, or risks money in such games; a gambler, a gamester.'
4. A person who looks for chances of personal advancement, esp. one willing to take risks or use dishonest methods to attain it; one who lives by his or her wits. Cf. adventuress n.

In the MTC, the most significant collocate of ADVENTURER, is OUR, which appears 76 times in the corpus out of a total 136 occurrences of the target word. However, this collocation occurs in just three texts; 73 coming from a single text: Smollett's Peregrine Pickle (1751). Smollett is responsible for 86 uses of the word in all, and Joseph Conrad for a further 29, in six different stories. This means that ADVENTURER is actually a great deal less widely used in the corpus than the keyword list might suggest. There is no evidence to suggest that this is a specifically maritime expression.

5.3.5 APPRENTICE

MTC: N=156; F=18

BNC: N=451; F=5.3

K=138

Appendix 2.39

The definitions in the OED and Smyth's book emphasise the legal status of the apprentice as being 'bound' to an employer or shipmaster. The ALDs give similar definitions although the binding nature of the agreement is less emphatic.

The system of apprenticeships has been widespread in Britain since at least the 14th century, when written about by Langland in Piers Plowman in 1362 (OED). The merchant navy was well manned with apprentices; The 1823 Merchant Shipping Act required all vessels over 80 tons to carry at least one apprentice on board (Beavis, 2002). During the years of impressment into the Navy (1597-1853) being an apprentice, bound to a specific ship, gave, in theory at least, immunity against the press gangs (RNM, 2001). APPRENTICE is not a maritime word, but the system was important in both the merchant service and Royal Navy, so the word is key in the MTC.

5.3.6 AFAR

MTC: N=72; F=8

BNC: N=131; F=1.5

K=104

Appendix 2.16

The evidence from the two corpora³⁸ shows the use of AFAR as being a literary stylistic affectation, used in more lyrical or dramatic passages of text. There is little difference between the corpora, the top collocate in both (See Appendix 2.16) is the function word FROM, as in the expression FROM AFAR. The only lexical item in the first 10 collocates in the BNC is ADMIRER; in the MTC the only lexical item is BATTLE. While the subject matter of maritime texts lends itself to poetic expressions of distance and separation, as embodied in AFAR, there is no evidence of the word's specific use as an ME.

³⁸ In the BNC data it was necessary to remove 22 concordance lines where the word AFAR refers to an African tribal group, making it a different and unrelated lemma.

5.3.7 ADVANTAGE

MTC: N=835; F=96

BNC: F=6203; F=72

K=52

Appendix 2.13

The OED shows ADVANTAGE as coming from Anglo Norman and with military but not specifically maritime uses, in the definition:

‘c. A favourable place for defence or attack, esp. an elevated place, a vantage point.’

supported by citations dating from 1405 and also by the entry

‘vantage-ground, n. A position which places one at an advantage for defence or attack. Freq. in 19th cent., chiefly in fig. use.’

Smyth also cites this use:

ADVANTAGE, or VANTAGE-GROUND. That which gives superiority of attack on, or defence against an enemy; affording means of annoyance or resistance. (1867:22)

The collocation data (App 2.13) is similar for both corpora, the function words within the two lists matching closely. The lexical items reflect the different fields of use in the corpora, thus in the MTC we have WIND, EBB and ENEMY reflecting the mariner’s environment, whereas in the BNC we have COMPETITIVE, and PECUNIARY, reflecting the fields of business and finance. Any ‘keyness’ in the MTC is accounted for by the fact that the texts in the MTC are predominantly concerned with conflict, competition and tales of survival; there is, however, no evidence to suggest that the term is in any way specifically maritime.

5.3.8 ACTION

MTC: N=2285; F= 261.47

BNC: N=19305; F=226

K=42

Appendix 2.8

The OED defines ACTION (N) as ‘a military engagement, a battle’, with citations dating from 1579 in support of this usage. The expression appears to be used equally in respect of both land and sea engagements. Smyth (1867:17) also simply defines ACTION as ‘Synonymous with battle’.

The keyness score of 42 comes from the predominance of texts concerned with naval warfare in the MTC. Thus ACTION, despite its high frequency in the corpus, cannot, of itself, be defined as a specialised maritime word. However, the collocation lists and clusters analysis indicate a number of MEs with ACTION as the headword (See App 2.8).

The top lexical collocates in the MTC are SHIP, STATIONS, FRIGATE and CLEARED and in the clusters analysis: CLEARED FOR ACTION, AT ACTION STATIONS, OUT OF ACTION, A FLEET ACTION, A NAVAL ACTION.

There is no indication in the OED, and neither does the corpus evidence suggest, that OUT OF ACTION is an ME; it is used equally in mechanical and non-mechanical, military and non-military contexts; its prominence in the MTC cluster list comes from the overall subject matter of the texts, rather than the maritime domain. FLEET ACTION and NAVAL ACTION are purely descriptive maritime technical terms. ACTION STATIONS and CLEAR FOR ACTION are dealt with in sections 0 and 0 respectively

5.3.9 ALLOWANCE

MTC: N=302; F=34.6

BNC: N=1944; F=22.8

K=41

Appendix 2.27

The OED defines ALLOWANCE as:

II. Senses relating to allotting, granting, or repaying.

5. a. A fixed sum of money provided for expenses; spec. a regular fixed sum given by a parent, guardian, etc., to a person who has no other significant income. In pl.: (Mil.) additional money provided for various purposes or services (distinguished from pay).

b. A fixed portion of food or some other provision granted to a person or animal; a ration. Also in extended use.

While Smyth defines it as:

ALLOWANCE. The ration or allotted quantum of provisions which each individual receives; and it is either double, full, two thirds, half or short, according to incidents. (1867:32)

This reflects the specialised use of the term in the naval context. The collocates and cluster lists (App 2.27) show that the allowances of water, grog and provisions were key issues for sailors; being 'ON SHORT ALLOWANCE', particularly of water in the tropics, or of grog at any time, were matters of serious concern. Naval pay for officers was augmented with a system of allowances.

TABLE-MONEY. An allowance to admirals and senior officers, in addition to their pay, to meet the expenses of their official guests. (Smyth 1867:671)

In the BNC, the types of ALLOWANCES being discussed are monetary, statutory and non-occupational, but the principal behind them is the same, with provision being made by 'the authorities' for the welfare of the population. There is no evidence to suggest that the expression has particularly maritime roots.

5.3.10 ABYSS³⁹

MTC: N=38; F=4.1

BNC: 108; F=1

K=34

Appendix 2.6

According to the OED, ABYSS derives from Middle English, with the earliest citations occurring in the late 14th century. It is defined as:

- 1.a. The great deep, the primal chaos; the bowels of the earth, the supposed cavity of the lower world; the infernal pit.
- b. In the ancient Hebrew cosmogony of the Old Testament: a vast subterranean body of water, the source of terrestrial water and of the Flood. Also: (in other cosmogonies) a primordial ocean on which the earth floated
2. A bottomless chasm; any unfathomable cavity or void space.
3. fig. An extremity of some condition or quality (usually a negative one); a condition from which recovery is impossible or unlikely.

Smyth (1867:15) gives a purely technical maritime definition:

ABYSS. A deep mass of waters; in hydrography it was synonymous with gulf

The dictionaries do not make any suggestion of maritime origins or specialisations. Apart from the hydrographical specialisation described by Smyth, ABYSS does not appear to be an ME used by sailors, but is an expression used by writers, writing of the sea in more spiritual contexts.

³⁹ See appendix 2.6 for full citation and concordance data

5.3.11 AMAIN

MTC: N=7; F= 0.92

BNC: N=1; F=0

K=31.95

Appendix 2.33

A very rare word, which, even in MTC, is only found twice outside Smyth's (1867) book. The OED entry has not been updated since the original entry in 1884:

1. a. lit. In, or with, full force; with main force, with all one's might; vehemently, violently.

Smyth's definition gives specific maritime usages but there are too few instances in the corpora to make a case for it being an ME.

AMAIN [Saxon a, and mægn, force, strength]. This was the old word to an enemy for 'yield,' and was written amayne and almayne. Its literal signification is, with force or vigour, all at once, suddenly; and it is generally used to anything which is moved by a tackle-fall, as 'lower amain!' let run at once. When we used to demand the salute in the narrow seas, the lowering of the top-sail was called striking amain, and it was demanded by the wave amain or brandishing a bright sword to and fro. (Smyth, 1867:34)

There are no entries for the word in any of the ALDs consulted.

In the BNC, the expression appears just once in a quotation from Shakespeare's Troilus and Cressida (Act V sc viii).

Then tells them to 'cry you all amain, 'Achilles has the mighty Hector slain'

The evidence suggests this very much an obsolete term, that even in Smyth's time was regarded as old fashioned, and which has now fallen entirely out of use.

5.3.12 ALL WEATHERS

MTC: N=13

BNC: N=57

Appendix 2.26.1.9

The OED gives no indication of ALL WEATHERS being specifically maritime, while Smyth's definition is simply

All Weathers, any time or season; continually. (1867:31)

In the MTC, there are 13 specifically maritime instances, while in the BNC there are 57 examples of the expression, only two of which are maritime. Other than the specific contexts, however, there is little to differentiate the way the expression is used in the two corpora. The ODP gives 'In every kind of weather, both good and bad' and none of the dictionary definitions or etymologies suggest maritime origins. The keyness of the expression can be accounted for by the fact that weather at sea, particularly in the days of sailing ships, and even now, with all but the biggest vessels, has always been a critical factor and a key topic of conversation, maritime songs and writing.

ALL WEATHERS is not classified as an ME, although there are a number of specific MEs linked to weather, such as WEATHER THE STORM, MAKE HEAVY WEATHER OF, UNDER THE WEATHER and KEEP A WEATHER EYE ON, which can be traced back to specific maritime roots and applications.

5.3.13 ALL TO PIECES

MTC: N= 15

BNC: 6

Appendix 2.26.1.8

The OED definitions of this expression give no indication of maritime origin or usage.

Piece, n

P2

c. to go (also be, come) (all) to pieces : (a) to break up, fall apart, lose cohesion; (b) fig. (colloq.), to fall into confusion or disarray; to become so distracted as to be unable to behave normally.

e. (all) to pieces : to a great degree, completely, through and through. Now colloq.

The ALDs give no definitions for the expression, while Smyth's definition is in line with the OED's definition (e).

All to pieces, a phrase used for out and out extremely or excessively; as 'we beat her in sailing all to pieces' (1867:31).

While the MTC concordances show this to have been used by sailors and Smyth's entry shows it to have been used at sea, there is no evidence to suggest that this is a specifically maritime expression..

5.4 Literal / Technical MEs

These are expressions that have not been adopted in the general discourse, but remain as maritime specialisations, so that where they appear in the BNC they are still used in a maritime context. Many of these will be obsolete expressions found now only in historical texts, or works of historical fiction.

5.4.1 ADMIRAL*

MTC: N=2987; F=342

BNC: N=615; F=7

K=1029

Appendix 2.10

The OED and Smyth both give lengthy descriptions of the office of Admiral, (see Appendix 2.10). The word has remained substantially unchanged in usage since the 15th century. The main collocates in both corpora are the names of individuals.

Inevitably, in the MTC, with its focus on naval matters and, in particular, the inclusion of issues of the Naval Chronicles of 1805 and 1806, listing fleet movements, promotions and individual accounts of ship to ship and fleet actions at the height of the war against Napoleon, and especially the battle of Trafalgar and Nelson's funeral in its aftermath, the lemma is very common, which accounts for the very high keyness rating.

5.4.2 ADMIRALTY

MTC: N=997; F=114

BNC: N=245; F=3

K=3,544

Appendix 2.11

There has been no real change in meaning of the word ADMIRALTY since its use early in the 15th century. The OED defines ADMIRALTY as:

The branch of justice concerned with maritime questions and offences
and

The governing body or department in charge of a country's navy and its administration
and

The building in which the business of such a governing body or department is transacted.

Its high keyness score in the MTC reflects the nature of the texts in the corpus, and, in particular, the presence in the corpus of two editions of the Naval Chronicles of 1805 and 1806, which account for nearly 300 iterations between them. Additionally the presence of a number of works of naval fiction from authors such as Forester, Marryat, Monsarrat, Pope and Woodman and the inclusion of Smyth's Wordbook, which provides 137 instances, accounts for the focus on naval legislative affairs represented by the ADMIRALTY.

In the BNC data, being a general corpus, there is no such focus. Even so, the decline in the role of the ADMIRALTY in the latter half of the 20th Century is marked by the nature of the references to ADMIRALTY found in the corpus, which are almost exclusively either historical or ephemeral.

- 1 In 1939 he joined the Admiralty as an electrical engineer and went to HMS Vernon, the Navy's torpedo and mining school at Portsmouth (BNC/AJD)
- 2 Maddison, 25, of Findlay Street, Rosyth, Fife, admitted murdering Darren Hall, 20, of Admiralty Road, and Allan Cuning, 21, of Parkside Street, both Rosyth, in his home on 6 December last year. (BNC/K5M)
- 3 THE highest tides this century may hit the southwest of England next week, tidal forecasters have warned. Producers of the Admiralty Tide Tables say the moon, sun and Earth should move in line on the night of September 17. (BNC/K33)
- 4 At the turn of the century it was appointed watchmakers to the Admiralty and in 1908 the firm was awarded the Grand Prix in the horological section of the Franco-British Exhibition. (BNC/K4T)
- 5 It shows the Parade with the Admiralty building, the spire of St Martin-in-the-Fields and the entrance to Downing Street (BNC/AKS)

In 518 newspaper texts, both broadsheets and tabloids (total 10,863,717 words), in the BNC, there are only 12 references to ADMIRALTY in just seven texts, six of these are from obituaries, including five in a single article from the Daily Telegraph (1, above). The other references include a report of a murder in Admiralty Road (2), an article on forthcoming spring tides (3) two lines from a business report on a company of watchmakers (4), and an historical article referring to a picture of the Admiralty Building (5). Thus none of the press articles, with the possible exception of the reference to 'producers of admiralty tide tables' in (3), are concerned in any way with the actual work of Admiralty.

Of 245 occurrences of ADMIRALTY in the BNC, the overwhelming majority are from texts concerned with the Admiralty's past history rather than its present role, or the word is used in somewhat peripheral or incidental ways .

5.4.3 ALOFT

MTC: N=730;F= 83.5

BNC: N=154; F=2

K=2683

Appendix 2.28

According to the OED and to Smyth, ALOFT is an Anglo-Saxon expression, with citations in the OED going back to circa AD1200. Its original meaning being given as:

a. Above, high up; at a high elevation in relation to an observer; overhead. ?c1200—1992 and additional meanings of Heaven and on horseback. There is also, however a specific maritime sense:

4. Naut. At the higher part of a vessel, rather than on deck; esp. on or around the masts, rigging, or upper yards of a vessel. Also: on deck, as opposed to below. Opposed to alow
?a1400—2000

While Smyth gives a detailed maritime definition of:

ALOFT [Anglo-Saxon, 'aloft', on high]. Above; overhead; on high. Synonymous with up above the tops, at the mast-head, or anywhere about the higher yards, masts, and rigging of ships.—'Aloft there!' the hailing of people in the tops.—'Away aloft!' the command to the people in the rigging to climb to their stations. Also, heaven: 'Poor Tom is gone 'aloft'.' (1867:33)

In maritime contexts, the expression is highly specialised and used to refer to the masts and rigging of a ship; effectively anything above the deck being described as ALOFT and anything at deck level or below as A-LOW. As with FORE AND AFT (see section 5.5.1.1), the terms are frequently juxtaposed, or variations using BELOW occur, particularly in sea shanties, where the line up aloft from down below appears regularly

1 Set that sail by half-past four,
That is what the Mate do roar.
Up aloft from down below,
Mister Mate has told us so. (MTC/ SS/087)

2 Then, with all her sails, light and heavy, and studding-sails on each side alow and aloft, she is the most glorious moving object in the world.
(MTC/ HNF/WA/AME)

The MTC data lists 233 collocates for ALOFT, including grammar words (App 2.27, Table 31). It reflects both the adverbial and the adjectival use of the term in relation to ships and crews and the technical use of the term, describing relative positions of places, objects and people on board a vessel.

In the BNC, ALOFT is usually adverbial, and generally concerns people carrying things. The top lexical collocate is LIKE, as a result of the frequent use of similes to reinforce the adverbial use of the term in stylised descriptions:

- 3 At one station they had cut short their promenade and dived back to get a thermometer.
A huddle of passengers gathered round the steps of the carriage to get a look at the reading and, lest their breathing distort the figure, Nadia held it aloft like a fish between finger and thumb.
Thirty below. (BNC/ARB)

ALOFT also tends to be used for stylistic effect in a way that is not found in the MTC.

- 4 The Lunatic, a cunning Cantonese, avoids pursuit in Regent's Park, where all the autumn trees are Chinese waiters in the dark.
So many bowls of birds' nest soup, held aloft on branching fans of fingertips, were bound to dupe the night sky and its radar scans.
(BNC/HRL)
- 5 She broke off when she saw one of his eyebrows ascend aloft.
(BNC/JYF)

The adverbial applications seen in the BNC are not derived from maritime use, so that the specialised maritime use of ALOFT makes this a literal/ technical ME.

5.4.4 ABAFT

MTC: N=312; F=3.57

BNC: N=8; F=0

Keyness: 1410

Appendix 2.2

The OED classifies ABAFT as being 'chiefly naut[ical]' as an adverb with the sense of
'In the rear, at the back, behind; spec. in or behind the stern of a ship', and as a nautical preposition meaning 'to the rear of, behind; nearer the stern than' and with origins in Middle English. It is the locational opposite of AFORE, (See 5.4.8).

The ODP gives the same definitions, in abridged form, as the OED; there is no entry in the MMD.

The MTC has 312 instances of ABAFT, which are all literal, maritime uses. It is predominantly used in technical descriptions of vessels and sailing. Smyth, in The Sailor's Word Book (1867), uses the expression 22 times in different, often highly technical, entries. It is also used seven times in the official report on the loss of the Titanic (Chaston, 1912).

The expression appears to be falling out of use, ABAFT appears only once in the MTC WebTexts subcorpus, which contains the most recently written texts, that citation coming from a history of the Blackball Line; a commercial fleet of sailing ships operating from 1816 until the early 1900s. The OED cites recent usages from 1985 through to 2008, although it describes these as 'rare'.

In the BNC, of eight occurrences, seven are maritime, technical uses, and one text applies the term to a fish rather than to a boat.

5.4.5 AFTERMOST

MTC: N = 50; F=5.72

BNC: N=0

Keyness=237

Appendix 2.20.1.1

The OED defines AFTERMOST as:

'Chiefly Naut[ical]' 'Nearest the stern of a ship or (in later use) the tail of an aircraft'.

With citations dating from 1658-1999. There are also citations dating from Early Old English to 2001, of a general, non-maritime sense of:

'nearest to the rear; furthest back. Also: last in order.'

In the MTC, AFTERMOST appears 50 times and always in technical descriptions of ships or their equipment. The abbreviated form AFTMOST (Smyth, 1867:25) also appears in the keyword list in 5.1.1 (Keyness = 33.28), because it is used five times in Smyth's technical definitions. There are no occurrences of the expression in the BNC.

Although AFTERMOST is described by the OED as having transferred into the aviation domain, there is no evidence of this in the BNC, where the expression does not occur at all. It is therefore classified here as purely maritime/technical based on the concordance evidence.

5.4.6 AFTER- (Prefix)

MTC: N=13817; F=1581

BNC: N=97831; F= 1145

K=117

Appendix 2.21

The OED cites usages of this construction in Old English from around 1200 and shows various specifically maritime uses from 1356 and in continuous use to the present day:

'spec. Naut. With the sense 'of or belonging to the rear part of a ship, nearer to the stern', as after-body, after-deck, after-quarter, after-ship, etc.'

Smyth's definition (1867:24) is more technical:

AFTER. A comparative adjective, applied to any object in the hind part of a ship or boat; as, the after-cabin, the after-hatchway, &c. After-sails, yards, and braces--those attached to the main and mizen masts. Opposed to fore.

The MTC analysis confirms that the maritime use of AFTER is in the form of compound noun phrases, where AFTER is used as a prepositional prefix, as described by the OED and Smyth. There are 350 occurrences of these specifically maritime/technical compound noun phrases in the MTC, but just 12 in the BNC; all uses in both corpora are maritime (See App 2.21. Table 23). The three most productive expressions are:

AFTER-CABIN (MTC x 49; BNC x 7)

- 1 Lord Whiffledale went on shore with his cortege; and Captain Reud returned into the after-cabin, which I had been, during his absence, disconsolately pacing. (MTC/ HF/HM/REE)
- 2 A large double berth dominates the centre of the full width after cabin. Its apparent width is increased by the rectangular ports set just below sheer in each quarter.(BNC/G37)

AFTER-HATCH (WAY) (MTC x 35; BNC x 0)

- 3 'Of course, there's plenty of room in the after-hatch. But they are sure to go rotten down there'. (MTC/ HF/JC/1)

AFTER-PART (x 99),

- 4 The water first made its way into the after-part of the ship.

5.4.7 ABREAST

MTC:N=262; F=30

BNC N=166; F= 1.94

K=706

Appendix 2.5

According to the OED, the earliest uses of the expression ABREAST are not nautical, the first citations dating from 1410 and referring to men or animals on land ‘Side by side and facing or moving in the same direction’. However, ABREAST has been adapted into specialised maritime use since at least the 16th century:

‘ 2 naut. With reference to the disposition of a squadron or other group of ships: with the vessels parallel to one another (usually evenly spaced) in a line at right angles to the direction of travel. Freq. in line abreast. Also in extended use (chiefly Mil.)’.

The OED cites, IN LINE ABREAST from 1770.

Smyth’s definition of ABREAST is precise and technical and he differentiates between the naval use of the term and that of the military use which, he suggests, fell out of use early to be replaced by the term File (1867:14). He cites two specific forms: firstly, ships manoeuvring in a line side-by-side = IN LINE ABREAST and, Secondly, the position of a ship or object in relation to another object = TO BE ABREAST OF. The origins of ABREAST are Anglo-Saxon and Frisian (OE = bréost, Fr = breast, Old Norse = brjóst), referring to the human breast. The shape and position of the bows of a ship presumably led to a transference of the expression into maritime use. Smyth (1867:132) lists ten separate entries for terms commencing with BREAST as technical descriptions of manoeuvres or ship-parts.

In the MTC, ABREAST occurs 262 times, and the main patterns found confirm Smyth’s descriptions of ABREAST OF and IN LINE ABREAST. It appears to be this maritime specialisation of the expression that has resulted in the high keyness score. IN LINE ABREAST is dealt with in 5.5.8 as it falls into the category of a Transfer expression rather than a simple technical ME

5.4.7.1 ABREAST OF

MTC: N=4

BNC: N=88

Appendix 2.5.1

This is listed in the OED as a maritime specialisation, as both adverb and preposition, alongside its use in other, non-maritime domains, viz

‘Naut. With reference to direction within board: directly to port or starboard of, rather than afore or aft’,

and ‘naut. Directly to port or starboard of, rather than afore or abaft.

In the MTC, it is invariably used to describe a precise geometric relationship; the collocates are words for parts of ships or specific landmarks and it remains a literal/technical expression.

5.4.7.2 KEEP ABREAST OF

In the BNC, the top collocate of ABREAST is developments with the top lexical verb being keep. Other top collocates include current and market. The BNC evidence suggests that the figurative use of the term, particularly in the form KEEP ABREAST OF, is the standard use of the expression, with literal, positional, uses being rare.

KEEP ABREAST OF occurs only four times in the MTC, compared to 88 instances in the BNC. Only one of the MTC lines is literal, suggesting that this specialised phrase has probably not developed from maritime use. The earliest citation in the OED is from 1832, although GO ABREAST, used figuratively, occurs from 1642 onwards.

The MMD entry reads:

Keep/stay abreast of something

To make sure you know all the most recent and important information about something

The ODP gives:

Up to date with the latest news, ideas or information

The evidence suggests that KEEP ABREAST OF is not an ME and is now purely idiomatic in use, with other nautical and physical positional uses being homonymic. There is no evidence of extended metaphors or exploitation of maritime or positional resonances in the use of the expression.

5.4.8 ASDIC

MTC: N=121; F=14

BNC: N=2; F=0

K=555

Appendix 2.45

The OED gives the following definition

Asdic, n.

Etymology: < the initials of Allied submarine detection investigation committee.

An echo-sounding device for the detection of submarines. Cf. SONAR

The ODP describes ASDIC as ‘An early form of sonar used to detect submarines’. The MMD has no entry.

ASDIC was developed during WWI and eventually, after WWII, superseded by SONAR. The word appears 121 times in the MTC, coming from the modern fiction writers, Forester, Monsarrat, Pope and Reeman, and a modern diarist, Dilworth, where the technology plays a central part in the stories that they tell.

- 1 But gradually they improved: they learned various tricks and idiosyncrasies of the ship and the asdic set (MTC/ MF/NM/3)

ASDIC is only found twice in the BNC, in articles about naval technological developments:

- 2 Both sides in the Second World War relied heavily on these devices, under such code names as Asdic (British) and Sonar (American), as well as the similar technology of Radar (American) or RDF (British), which uses radio echoes rather than sound echoes. (BNC/J52)
- 3 When Germany was attacking our vital Atlantic life-line in December 1940, Wolverton Works were asked by the Admiralty to make Domes S.L., part of the famous (ASDIC) device for detecting the presence of submarines. (BNC/B25)

Unlike the acronyms RADAR and SONAR (See App 2.44; Figs 204 and 205), both of which are often used figuratively to describe human and animal senses and instincts, ASDIC has not become a part of the general discourse as a metaphorical addition to the five senses and is classified as technical ME.

5.4.9 ATHWART

MTC: N=107; F=12

BNC: N=14; F=0.15

K=429

MWE: ATHWART HAWSE: N = 15

Appendix 2.48

ATHWART is rooted in Norse/early Middle English, dating back to at least the 12th Century, originally meaning across. It can be used as an adjective, adverb or preposition. The OED (original entry published 1885) gives ATHWART as 1.a. Across from side to side, transversely; usually, but not necessarily, in an oblique direction'.

With citations from 1611 and specifically nautical usages:

b. 'Naut. From side to side of a ship' cited from 1762, and

3. Naut. Across or transversely to the course or direction of. †athwart the fore foot: (a cannon-ball fired) across in front of a ship's bows, as a signal for her to bring to. to run athwart: to run into sidewise cited from 1693—1865.

The MMD has no entry for ATHWART, while the ODP gives:

Prep. 1. from side to side; across

2. in opposition to; counter to

Adverb: 1. across from side to side; transversely

2. so as to be perverse or contradictory

Smyth accounts for 39 of the 107 occurrences of ATHWART in the MTC.

ATHWART. The transverse direction; anything extending or across the line of a ship's course.--'Athwart hawse', a vessel, boat, or floating lumber accidentally drifted across the stem of a ship, the transverse position of the drift being understood.--'Athwart the fore-foot', just before the stem; ships fire a shot in this direction to arrest a stranger, and make her bring-to.--Athwart ships, in the direction of the beam; from side to side: in opposition to 'fore-and-aft'. (Smyth, 1867:59)

HAWSE. This is a term of great meaning. Strictly, it is that part of a vessel's bow where holes are cut for her cables to pass through. It is also generally understood to imply the situation of the cables before the ship's stem, when she is moored with two anchors out from forward, one on the starboard, and the other on the port bow. It also denotes any small distance between her head and the anchors employed to ride her, as 'he has anchored in our hawse,' 'the brig fell athwart our hawse,' &c. Also, said of a vessel a little in advance of the stem; as, she sails athwart hawse, or has anchored in the hawse. If a vessel drives at her anchors into the hawse of another she is said to 'foul the hawse' of the vessel riding there; hence the threat of a man-of-war's-man, 'If you foul my hawse, I'll cut your cable,'. (ibid:372)

In the MTC, the ME is used in technical descriptions including ATHWART HAWSE, which occurs 15 times, of which six instances are figurative.

- 1 When we got aboard the schooner again, we found a canoe that had drifted athwart-hawse and had been secured. (MTC/HF/JFC/1)
- 2 'Well,' said my father, 'I may come athwart hawse of that old picaroon yet, if he don't look out. (MTC/HF/FM/8)
- 3 Exasperated at this sarcasm, he replied, with great vehemence, 'You lie, lubber! D-- your bones! what business have you to come always athwart my hawse in this manner? You, Pipes, was upon deck, and can bear witness whether or not I fired too soon. (MTC/HF/TS/2)

The examples in texts 1-3 come from Cooper (1843), Marryat, (1840) and Smollett (1758). Text 1 is a literal/ technical use of the expression. Texts 2 and 3 are both figurative, exploiting the salient features of ATHWART HAWSE as meaning CROSSING or OBSTRUCTING a ship's mooring cable as described by Smyth above. This use, which exploits maritime resonances, is a well established dormant conventionalised metaphor that appears to have been in use for around 100 years. Although such language is genuinely maritime, it also appears to be used by the authors, particularly Smollett and Marryat, as a resonator to reinforce the maritime nature of their characters.

On its own, ATHWART is almost invariably used in its technical sense:

- 4 I had entered the cabin, when I felt a terrible shock. I ran to the companion-way, when I saw a ship athwart our bows. At that moment our foremast went by the board, carrying with it our main topmast.
(MTC/ HNF/WA/AME)

with just two instances of figurative use being found in the MTC and both from Smollett's 1748 novel Roderick Random:

- 5 I know not; but he snatched a flail from one of his followers, and came up with a show of assaulting the lieutenant, who, putting himself in a posture of defence, proceeded thus: 'Lookee, you lubberly son of a w--e, if you come athwart me, 'ware your gingerbread work. I'll be foul of your quarter, d--n me.' (MTC/ HF/TS/1)
- 6 ' A ray of hope shot athwart my soul at this suggestion; I thanked my friend for this seasonable recollection, and, after having promised to take no resolution till his return, dismissed him to Wapping for intelligence.
(MTC/HF/TS1)

With the exception of the modern historical novelists, such as Forester and Woodman, writing in the recreated vernacular of eighteenth and nineteenth century seamen, the ME does not appear in any texts in the MTC written post 1920.

In the BNC, the ME, ATHWART HAWSE, does not occur and only one occurrence of ATHWART can be classified as maritime;

- 4 He became adept at launching himself over the canoe's side; first leaning back with legs outstretched athwart the cockpit, a quick flip of the body brought him face down towards the water before lowering himself onto it.
(BNC/CCS)

The remaining 13 instances come from texts ranging from poetic and historical works to modern novels and academic writing.

- 5 And with a chick on the premises you just cannot live the old life.
You just cannot live it.
I know: I checked.
The hungover handjob athwart the unmade bed - you can't do it.
(BNC/H0M)
- 6 But oh! that deep romantic chasm which slanted
Down the green hill athwart a cedarn cover! (BNC/B0R)
- 7 Modern Yugoslavia sat athwart fault lines of European history: the fourth-century division of the Roman empire, the 11th-century division of Christendom, the 17th-century border between the Ottoman and Habsburg empires. (BNC/CRC)
- 8 One old farmer in the Stowmarket area of Suffolk said that, ideally, for the barley (and the wheat) crop the land should be ploughed east to west and then drilled overwart (athwart) so that the ringes or rows of young corn would lie north-south and be warmed by the sun on both sides of the row.
(BNC/G09)

The maritime use of ATHWART appears to have remained firmly within the maritime discourse and is now all but obsolete. The BNC lines are all used in the literal sense as in definition 1a in the OED, cited above. It is very difficult to say with any certainty, whether the maritime and non-maritime uses have developed together or independently.

ATHWART is therefore classified as a literal/technical ME, that, in the form ATHWART HAWSE, has also been used as a dormant conventional metaphor in the maritime discourse, but which is now all but obsolete. The literal use as found in the BNC is not classified as an ME.

5.4.10 ARMED (Adj.)

MTC: N=959; F=110

BNC: N=4352; F=51

K=391

Appendix 2.42

The OED gives no specialised entry for maritime usages of the term stating simply:

armed, adj.

1. lit. Furnished with arms or armour; fully equipped for war.

Smyth, however give s a more specialist definition:

ARMED. Completely equipped for war.--*Armed at all points*_, covered with armour.--Armed 'en flute,' see FLUTE.--Armed mast, made of more than one tree.--Armed ship, a vessel fitted out by merchants to annoy the enemy, and furnished with letters of marque, and bearing a commission from the Admiralty to carry on warlike proceedings. (1867:52)

FLUTE, OR FLUYT....vessels only partly armed; as armed en flute.

(ibid:310)

ARMED is not an ME in its own right; its keyness in the MTC comes not from the maritime nature of the texts, but rather from the fact that a high proportion of the texts deal with conflict and naval military history. As Smyth's definitions indicate, there are, however, a number of maritime specialisations (See collocates list, App 2.41: Table 47). In particular, ARMED is used as a modifier for particular types of vessel as well as certain, specialised technical terms, unique to maritime use:

ARMED EN FLUTE⁴⁰ (12 occurrences)

The commodore of the India squadron went on board, when he found that she was cruising for some large Dutch store-ships and vessels armed 'en flute', which were supposed to have sailed from Java. (MTC/ HF/FM/5)

ARMED AND EQUIPPED (6 occurrences)

L'Elizabeth has been a great annoyance to the trade in this country, and has often escaped from our cruisers by her superior sailing; is a fine vessel, well armed and equipped, and, in my opinion, admirably calculated for His Majesty's service. (MTC/N/NC/1806)

ARMED DEFENCE SHIPS (9 occurrences)

Deal, Nov 5. Early this morning, in a hard gale of wind, the Duchess of Bedford armed defence ship, after breaking an anchor, drove on shore between Sanderson Castle and No.1 Battery.(MTC/N/NC/1805)

⁴⁰ ARMED EN FLUTE from the French armé en flûte. Used to describe warships with their guns removed, perhaps for the transportation of troops or additional cargo, thus leaving rows of empty gun ports reminiscent of the holes in a flute.

ARMED MERCHANT CRUISER (3 occurrences)

In April of 1915 she was converted for use as an armed Merchant Cruiser and joined the 10th Cruiser Squadron (MTC/WT/RM1)

MANNED AND ARMED (15 occurrences)

The 'Acasta' now made the signal for 'Boats manned and armed to be held in readiness.' (MTC/ HF/FM/7)

These multi-word expressions can be classified as technical MEs, but ARMED, on its own, is not an ME.

5.4.11 AIRS

MTC: N=119; F=13.6

BNC: N=116; F=1.3

K=263

Appendix 2.25

The OED gives one specific definition of AIR that is of relevance to the high keyness score for AIRS:

'6. Air in motion; a current or draught of air; (esp. in the context of sailing) a breeze, a light wind.'

Smyth's definition is more specific:

'AIR – Air means also a gentle breath of wind gliding over the surface of the water (1867:27).

Light Airs. Unsteady and faint flaws of wind (ibid: 444)

LIGHT AIRS is shown to be a technical expression, with a specific meaning in the maritime context in both corpora. The term was formalised in 1805 by Francis Beaufort, a Royal Navy Officer, who devised a precise scale for gauging wind force, for the use of seamen. The scale was adopted by the Royal Navy in 1832. It originally related to the amount of sail a ship could carry, depending on wind strength. Although it has been revised over the years, the basic scale remains in use. According to Beaufort's original scale, LIGHT AIRS are 'just sufficient to give steerage way' (Met Office, 2012:7). In addition to light, the MTC, also has faint, capricious, finicky, paltry, variable, northerly, southerly etc. The expression is found 64 times in this specific nautical use in the MTC, compared with just eight occurrences in the BNC.

MTC (64 lines)

- 1 A week before she had fallen into a heavy fog accompanied by calm. Since then the fog-bank had not lifted, and the only wind had been light airs and catspaws. (MTC/ HF/JL/BLUE)

BNC (8 lines)

- 2 While the current sail seems ideal for light airs, it might be worth considering a flatter, non-overlapping jib which is likely to maintain a better shape across a wider wind band (BNC/G37)

AIRS is classified as a purely technical ME. Other uses of AIRS are not MEs and are not therefore analysed here.

5.4.12 ARTICLES

MTC: N=581; F=66

BNC: N=2592; F=30

K=246

Appendix 2.43

ARTICLES is not an ME per se, but the word has specific maritime uses, highlighted in the collocates list (App 2.42:Table 48) by the high position of WAR and SIGNED. These are two specific applications that are particularly applicable to this study, defined under Article, n. in the OED as:

P1.

b. articles of apprenticeship: an agreement between an apprentice and his or her employer, setting out the nature and duration of the training to be provided; such a period of training.

and

d. Articles of War: a set of regulations drawn up to govern the conduct of a country's military and naval forces (now chiefly hist.).

In Britain these regulations were omitted from the Army Act of 1955 but retained in the Naval Discipline Act of 1957. In the United States they were superseded in 1950 by the Uniform Code of Military Justice.

5.4.12.1 ARTICLE(S) OF WAR

MTC: N=101

BNC: N=1

ARTICLES OF WAR. A code of rules and orders based on the act of parliament for the regulation and government of Her Majesty's ships, vessels, and forces by sea: and as they are frequently read to all hands, no individual can plead ignorance of them. It is now termed the New Naval Code. (Smyth, 1867:55)

In MTC, the most frequent lexical collocate of ARTICLES is WAR, occurring in the phrase ARTICLES OF WAR 101 times.

- 1 He pointed out to them that they must consider themselves as on board of a man-of-war, and be guided by the articles of war, which were written for them all--and that in case they forgot them, he had a copy in his pocket, which he would read to them to morrow morning, as soon as they were comfortably settled on board of the ship. (MTC/ HF/FM/4)

The Articles of War were the highly detail rules of conduct in battle for naval ships, originally drawn up in 1653 by the Lords of Admiralty and ratified by parliament in 1749 (Herman, 2004). The articles governed and circumscribed all aspects of discipline on board ship, with serious consequences for their breach, including capital punishment, as can be seen from this extract from the 1749 Naval Act.

- '26. Care shall be taken in the conducting and steering of any of His Majesty's ships, that through Wilfulness, Negligence or other Defaults, no Ship be stranded, or run upon any Rocks or Sands, or split or hazarded; upon Pain, that such as shall be found guilty therein be punished by Death, or such other Punishment as the Offence by a Court Martial shall be judged to deserve.
- '27. No Person in or belonging to the Fleet shall sleep upon his Watch, or negligently perform the Duty imposed on him, or forsake his Station; upon Pain of Death, or such other Punishment as a Court Martial shall think fit to impose, and as the Circumstances of the Case shall require.
- '28. All Murders committed by any Person in the Fleet, shall be punished with Death by the Sentence of a Court Martial.
- '29. If any Person in the Fleet shall commit the unnatural and detestable Sin of Buggery or Sodomy with Man or Beast, he shall be punished with Death by the Sentence of a Court Martial.
- '30. All Robbery committed by any Person in the Fleet, shall be punished with Death or otherwise, as a Court Martial, upon Consideration of the Circumstances, shall find meet.

(Davis, 2013)

In the BNC, the phrase occurs only once, in the context of joining the Salvation Army.

- 2 The first step was to enrol as a soldier, the Army equivalent of church membership.
This involved signing the 'Articles of War' which included a statement of belief in Christ, renunciation of such evils as swearing, smoking, drinking and violence, obedience to officers and allegiance to 'carrying on the war' in which every Christian is involved.(BNC/H7E)

5.4.12.2 SIGN (THE) ARTICLES

MTC: N=23

BNC: N=1

ARTICLES. The Express stipulations to which seamen bind themselves by signature, on joining a merchant ship (Smyth, 1867:55).

The OED gives a definition for Articles of Apprenticeship (see above), however, no entry is given for Ship's Articles as found 10 times in the MTC data. In the merchant service, seamen 'signed ship's articles' on joining a ship, which effectively bound them to obey the command of the captain, and, in theory at least, bound the captain to treat the crew properly.

There are 23 lines in the MTC using the expression SIGN ARTICLES:

- 3 The next morning I and my companion, who had escaped the ordeal that had proved too much for me, were summoned to go ashore to the rendezvous, that we might sign the ship's articles; or, in sailor phrase, get shipped. (MTC/ L/SL/THIR)
- 4 Seven thousand sailors signed articles in the counting-room of Joseph Peabody and went to sea in his eighty ships which flew the house-flag in Calcutta, Canton, Sumatra, and the ports of Europe until 1844.
(MTC/ HNF/AB/ALA)

These very specific maritime applications of ARTICLES explain the keyness of the word in Table 17. Their absence from the BNC confirms that these are purely maritime literal/technical expressions.

5.4.13 AWEIGH

MTC: N=40; F=4.58

BNC: N=3; F=0

K=174

Appendix 2.52

The OED defines AWEIGH as:

'adv. Of an anchor: Just raised perpendicularly from the ground; = a-peak adv. a, a-trip adv. 2. (Said loosely also of the vessel or its crew.)'.

While Smyth (1867:63) gives:

'The anchor being a-trip, or after breaking out of the ground'.

The root of AWEIGH is the OE wegan meaning To Weigh, which, according to the OED, has the meaning of 'to bear, carry, hold up; to heave up, lift', with the earliest citations dating from circa 897.

The specific maritime use of the term WEIGH ANCHOR is cited from around 1400, meaning 'to heave up (a ship's anchor) from the ground before sailing.' AWEIGH is not related to its homophone AWAY (See 5.3.1, above), but there is confusion between the two words, as witnessed by the erroneous use of the expression heave aweigh, in an online transcription of the sea shanty Santy Ano, which accounts for 20 of the 40 concordance lines found.

Hugill (1994:76) provides a number of variants of this shanty, none of which use the form heave aweigh, although there is one version with the lines:

- 1 Heave away, hurrah for roll an' go
All on the plains of Mexico
Heave an' weigh, we're bound for Mexico

The modern maritime novelist, Dudley Pope, attempts to clarify the position regarding the two words:

- 2 Away and aweigh; Ramage mused over the two words, and how often they confused landsmen. The anchor was 'aweight', meaning it was off the bottom, when in effect it was being weighed by the cable. With the anchor hoisted on board, the ship made sail and was 'under way' or, putting it more clearly, was on her way somewhere. She 'weighed' anchor and then got under 'way' or, if she was still moving after furling sails, or was being carried along by the wind, she had 'way' on. (Pope, 1979:173)

In the BNC there are only three instances of AWEIGH, which all refer to the same song and film title:

- 3 Among films he scored or wrote for are Hellzapoppin, Anchors Aweigh, Love is a Many Splendored Thing, and Myra Breckinridge.(BNC/A98)

WEIGH* ANCHOR occurs ten times:

- 4 Two hours later we weighed anchor, drew out into the dirty, oil-stained river and moved slowly downstream along London's crowded waterfront, passing other ships, docks, warehouses, cranes, wagons and lorries, and all the come and go of men associated with the sea. (BNC/H0A)

Related to AWEIGH/AWAY are the expressions GET UNDER WEIGH AND GET UNDER WAY which are dealt with in 5.7.8: p297 as MEs that have been idiomaticised.

5.4.14 AFORE

MTC: N=80; F=9

BNC: N=99; BNC =1

K=154

Appendix 2.19

There are two separate uses cited in the OED for AFORE, which has its roots in Old English on foran:

- A adv. =Before Now arch., regional, and (of place, position, or direction) Naut
1. Of place, position, or direction, fixed or involving motion: in front, in advance, ahead; in or into the forepart.
 2. Of time: during the preceding period of time, in or at an earlier time; previously.

The OED also gives a prepositional use for which the entry is as the adverbial use above. It is marked again as 'nautical' and also as 'now obsolete'. Smyth (1867:24) gives AFORE as:

A Saxon word opposed to abaft, and signifying that part of the ship which lies forward or near the stem. It also means farther forward; as the galley is afore the bits. – Afore, the same as before the mast. Afore the beam, all in the field of view from amidship in a right angle to the ship's keel to the horizon forward.

Smyth's book accounts for 12 out of 13 technical uses of the term in the MTC. This technical ME does not occur in the BNC. The remaining instances of AFORE come from passages of reported speech, as reconstructions of seamen's vernacular English, meaning 'before', either temporally or physically.

1 -'Don't tech me,' snarled Donkin, backing away.--'Then go. Go faster.'-- 'Don't yer 'it me.... I will pull yer up afore the magistrty.... I'll show yer up.'
(MTC/ HF/JC/8)

2 So I kissed her hard and proper Afore her flash man came
And fare ye well, me Bowery gal
I know your little game

Shanty: New York Gals (MTC/SS117)

These lines come from a range of novels and journals from both the historical and modern text subcorpora, as well as genuine sea shanties, suggesting that this was very much a word in use amongst seamen during the eighteenth and nineteenth and even into the twentieth centuries.

AFORE-MENTIONED: AFORE survives in modern Standard English only in the phrase AFORE-MENTIONED, which appears only twice in the MTC, once from Captain Marryat, writing in 1836, and once in a modern, on-line, merchant seaman's journal (MacFadyen) published in 2010. Whereas AFORE appears to survive only in vernacular speech in the BNC, AFORE-MENTIONED appears in highly formalised texts in various genres including autobiography, review articles, technical scientific papers and text books covering topics from history to Chinese iconography:

1 The cooperation between the factors binding to the 80 bp fragment and these general transcription factors is demonstrated in experiments showing that point mutations in the afore mentioned elements resulted in a strong impairment of transcription (BNC/FTE)

All other occurrences of AFORE in the BNC are from recorded or fictional versions of vernacular speech. Within the data are a number of transcriptions of audio files from the Orkneys where AFORE features regularly e.g.

2 When they served her with a stallion you see, it was three weeks elapsed then before she if you didn't go and foal with that service it was three weeks elapsed afore you came again. (BNC/HE8)

Other lines come from historical novels and include a number of books with maritime themes, reproducing the vernacular speech of seamen:

- 3 'Aye, and plenty princes wanting England for a dowry, 'n all,' Frank Polwhele put in.
'Like as not we'll be at war again afore the decade's out.'

(BNC/EWH)

Note that the recordings from the Orkneys centre around the lives of the older inhabitants, recalling their war-time experiences, which were heavily involved with both the home fishing industry and with the Royal Navy, thus providing some sense of continuity with the sense of AFORE as an ME, and one which appears to be more associated with spoken, rather than written texts.

5.4.15 ALLOW

MTC: N=16; F=1.8

BNC: N=0

K=76

Appendix 2.31

The OED and the ODP suggest that the expression originates from Middle English, alawe, with the earliest, non-maritime citations coming from the early 15th century, meaning low or lower down, and nautical uses being cited from the early 16th century. The ODP gives the definition 'Nautical, archaic on or near the deck of a ship.'

ALLOW is a rare item in the MTC and does not occur at all in the BNC. American authors Melville (1851, 1924), Slocum (1890) and Abbot (1902), account for nine lines, perhaps suggesting that the expression may have remained more current in America. Tobias Smollett's Peregrine Pickle was written in 1751; other than Smyth's Sailor's Word-Book (1867), the only other English text cited comes from the Times' report on the Loss of the London (1866).

As pointed out by the OED, the expression is invariably tied to ALOFT:

- 1 I found my Brazilian crew to be excellent sailors, and things on board the 'Aquadneck' immediately began to assume a brighter appearance, aloft and allow. (MTC/ HNF/JS/LIB)

There may be some distance between the two components, as in 'Moby Dick' (Melville, 1851).

- 2 There's a sermon now, writ in high heaven, and the sun goes through it every year, and yet comes out of it all alive and hearty. Jollily he, aloft there, wheels through toil and trouble; and so, alow here, does jolly Stubb. (HF/HM/2)

In citation 2, Melville uses ALOFT and ALOW as metaphysical metaphors for Heaven and Hell, exploiting the maritime resonances of the overall context, rather than as technical sea terms, thus making this an innovative metaphor. However, the remaining lines found in the MTC are all technical descriptions, thus ALOW is categorised as a Literal /Technical component of the Fixed MWE: ALOW AND ALOFT.

5.4.16 ACCOMMODATIONS

MTC: N=29; F= 3.2

BNC; N=35; F=0.35

K=56.5

Appendix 2.7

ACCOMMODATION is generally regarded as a non-count noun, (MMD) although, in both MTC and the BNC, it is used in its pluralised form.

c. Room and provision for the reception of people, esp. with regard to sleeping, seating, or entertainment; living premises, lodgings.

(a) As a mass noun. Also: the action of supplying such room and provision.

(b) As a count noun in pl. Now U.S. (OED)

The OED also gives two specifically nautical compounds; ACCOMMODATION LADDER, which appears once in the BNC data and three times in the MTC, and ACCOMMODATION BOAT, which does not occur in either corpus. Smyth however gives a definition of the pluralised form

ACCOMMODATIONS. Cabins fitted for passengers. - Accommodation ladder, a convenient flight of steps fixed at the gangway, by which officers and visitors enter the ship. - Accommodation, the physical application of one thing to another by analogy (1867:16)

In both corpora, the main use of ACCOMMODATION is overwhelmingly as defined in definitions above. Its use in the non-count form is very similar in both corpora and it does not register as a keyword in the MTC. However, there is a clear difference in the use of the pluralised form, which registers as a keyword. The pluralised form is cited as now being an American usage, although the earliest citations in the OED date from the 17th century.

In the MTC, ACCOMMODATIONS is only used to mean rooms or cabins to accommodate people. In the BNC, ACCOMMODATIONS carries this meaning in 23 of the 43 concordance lines, while the remaining 20 carry the meaning of a political agreement or compromise. There are also four maritime uses of the expression in advertisements for the sale of yachts, thus providing a link back to the maritime usage in the MTC. This would support the idea that ACCOMMODATIONS has a specific maritime meaning that is more restricted than its meaning outside that discourse community.

The political and maritime meanings are now homonymic, although coming originally from the same root, suggesting a process of extension and finally idiomatisation from the original meaning of 'adaption; the process of being adapted', as cited in the OED.

5.4.17 ADVICES

MTC: N=16; F=2

BNC: N=7; F=0

K=49

Appendix 2.15

The OED gives the following definitions:

Advice, n

2.b. As a count noun.

(a) A piece of advice

7. information conveyed or imparted

a. Intelligence, news. Also (now less commonly) as count noun: a report; a dispatch

b. Esp. in commercial and legal contexts: formal notification or notice; a document conveying this

8. An advice boat

C2. attrib. Designating various kinds of light fast boat used as dispatch-boats; esp. in advice boat, advice ship. Now chiefly hist.

Smyth gives no entry for ADVICES but has ADVICE BOAT:

ADVICE-BOAT. A small fast-sailing vessel in advance of a fleet, employed to carry intelligence with all possible despatch. They were first used in 1692, to gain tidings of what was transacting in Brest, previous to the battle of La Hogue. (1867:22)

In MTC, the word is found both in sense 2b (above) (see text 1, below) and as maritime specialisation in line with definition 7a (see text 2); the concordances, with the exception of line 8, all come from contemporary nineteenth century sources and the maritime uses provide a link with the ME ADVICE BOAT, as cited by the OED and Smyth as a means of carrying information or 'ADVICES' (txt 3).

- 1 He was closeted two whole hours with his aunt, who enriched him with many pious advices, recapitulated all the benefits which, through her means, had been conferred upon him since his infancy, cautioned him against the temptations of lewd women, who bring many a man to a morsel of bread,(MTC/ HF/TS/2)
- 2 Captain Appleton arrived at Boston from Martinico, in 28 days, brought intelligence that that place was closely blockaded by the British Squadron, and an attack every moment expected. Further advices state, that the Merchants had sent their most valuable property into the country, the political offices of Government were removing, and the American Captains were desired to depart as soon as possible (MTC/ N/NC/1805)
- 3 At last one day the superior sent for me, and told me that he was about to send an advice-boat to Lisbon, and I might take a passage if I wished; that it was a very small one, but a very fast sailer. (MTC/ HF/FM/11)

THE BNC evidence is very different; here, four of the seven occurrences are errors in usage: two where a character in a story is speaking in broken English, one being a misprint in a news article and one, (text 4) from a 1968 English Grammar book defining ADVICES as an error in usage. The remaining occurrences use the word in a legal context, as in definition 7b from the OED above.

- 4 Not every noun has a plural form, but, because such words behave in other ways like words which do form plurals, they are admitted into the noun class, e.g. advice - it is impossible to say *advices, but it is accepted into the noun class. (BNC/HOY)
- 5 'Now we're looking to encourage our customers to send remittance advices electronically so we can post them straight into the sales ledger, and eventually we'll 'close the loop' as regards other documents too.
(BNC/CBT)

ADVICES is classified as an obsolete technical ME. However, it remains in use in its legal sense, which is regarded here as a homonym.

5.4.18 APEAK / APEEK

APEAK

MTC: N=9; F=1 BNC:N=0

K=47.5

APEEK

MTC: N=13

Appendix 2.38

According to the OED, APEAK or APEEK is purely nautical and dates back to the 16th century.

APEEK. A ship drawn directly over the anchor is apeek: when the fore-stay and cable form a line, it is short stay apeek; when in a line with the main-stay, long stay apeek. The anchor is apeek when the cable has been sufficiently hove in to bring the ship over it. Yards apeek. when they are topped up by contrary lifts. (Smyth 1867:46)

Smyth's definition (under APEEK) shows it to be a precise technical term. Smyth accounts for all 13 instances of APEEK in the corpus. Maryatt, Melville and Smollett all use APEAK. It is not found in more modern texts. This, and its absence from the BNC, suggests that it has fallen out of use and has failed to cross over into the general discourse. There are no entries in the ALDs.

5.4.19 ARTIFICER

MTC: N=17; F=2

BNC: N=14; F=0.2

K=41

Appendix 2.44

According to the OED, the term ARTIFICER comes from Anglo-Norman or Middle English, originally military and denoting a skilled craftsman with mechanical aptitude. It has a specialised meaning within the maritime discourse:

Artificer, n.
5.Mil: b. An engineer or skilled technician in a navy, esp. the Royal Navy. Freq. with modifying word, as engine-room artificer, ordnance artificer, etc.; also in compounds, as artificer-engineer.

Smyth also points out the artificer's special status on board.

ARTIFICER. One who works by hand in wood or metal; generally termed an idler on board, from his not keeping night watch, and only appearing on deck duty when the hands are turned up (1867:55)

Shakespeare wrote of 'another lean and unwashed artificer' (King John; Act I, Sc 2). By the 1760s the term was being used in the navy and, as the OED citation above states, the expression has become specialised therein.

- 1 Mechanic' was not the only term used to describe skilled workmen. 'Artificer' was then used more widely than in its later application to the royal dockyards and the Navy. (BNC/HXC)

Artificers have been known in the navy as 'Tiffys' since the late 1890's (Partridge, 2002). Cyril Tawney, an ex-Royal Navy artificer and petty officer, and writer of modern sea songs, borrowed Shakespeare's line for his own song 'Lean and Unwashed Tiffy' ' written in 1958, in celebration of ERAs or Engine Room Artificers.

- 2 I'm a lean and unwashed tiffy
I come up from Plymouth Town
I can fix it in a jiffy
If you'll hand that spanner down
(Tawney, 1973)

The collocates list (App. 2.44: Table 49) shows the maritime specialisation of the term. In the days of sailing ships, artificers were mainly employed in the Naval dockyards:

- 3 Are not the artificers so frequently broken off, by docking of ships, and other circumstances, as to render it very difficult, if not impossible, to pay them for their labour by job; Yes. Is not the present system of employing all the artificers in this yard by job task so complicated, and the schemes of prices for the different. work so incomplete, as to be likely to produce much inconvenience and expense to the public service?
(MTC/N/NC/1806)

But they were also employed on board ships in specialist roles as coopers, blacksmiths and carpenters. As ships became mechanised, the role of these men became increasingly critical to the functioning of the ship and their titles were formalised.

- 4 Down in the Captain's cabin, Watts, the Chief Engine-room Artificer, was reporting to the Captain about the engines under his charge.
(MTC/ MF/NM/3)

In the BNC, ARTIFICER is used in a variety of contexts, including Masonic references to God as The DIVINE ARTIFICER, two references to Army ARTIFICERS and, three to Naval ARTIFICERS.

- 5 In Plato's cosmology the universe was fashioned by a divine artificer imposing form and order on primeval matter, which was originally in a state of chaos. (BNC/ASF)
- 6 Andrew Swales, 31, of Chesham Street, Middlesbrough, was one of 12 men killed when the Bristow Super Puma plunged into icy seas during a short hop from an oil rig to an accommodation platform.
Mr Swales, an instrument artificer, worked for Press Offshore, based in Wallsend, Tyne and Wear. (BNC/K4W)

While ARTIFICER cannot be classified as an ME in its own right, the specialised naval versions of the expression, including ERA and ENGINE ROOM ARTIFICER, as well as the slang ‘tiffy’ are certainly MEs. There is no evidence of metaphorical use, which reinforces Hanks’ observation (2006:21) that highly specialised, technical or scientific lexis is rarely used metaphorically. On the other hand, Partridge (2002:1232) notes that the slang term ‘tiffy’ has an additional sense of:

‘ a carpenter’s term of contempt for a botching fellow carpenter - i.e. one only fit to work with metals’

However, this use is not found in either MTC or the BNC data.

5.4.20 CARRY* AWAY

Frequencies	MTC	BNC
CARRY AWAY (ALL)	357	455
CARRY AWAY (Phrasal Verb) / Maritime	250	5
CARRY AWAY (Phrasal Verb) (Fig. = emotion)	28	273
CARRY AWAY (Phrasal verb) (Fig. = death)	2	4
CARRY AWAY (Non-Phrasal) (Lit.)	77	173

Appendix 2.51.2

CARRY AWAY is found as both a phrasal verb and as a verb + adverb combination. In The MTC, the most frequent use is as a specialised maritime phrasal verb, defined by the OED as:

3. To break off and remove by force. Also, to lose by breakage; and intr.
Chiefly Naut.

While the ODP gives:

carry something away

Nautical Lose a mast or other part of a ship through breakage.

The MMD has no definition for this nautical use.

Smyth’s definition is comprehensive:

CARRY AWAY, TO. To break; as, ‘That ship has carried away her fore-topmast,’ i.e. has broken it off. It is customary to say, we carried away this or that, when knocked, shot, or blown away. It is also used when a rope has been parted by violence.(1867:167)

ME (Phrasal Verb)

70% of occurrences (250 out of a total of 357) are in the form of the specialised fixed ME defined by Smyth, which, for the purposes of this study is classed as a literal meaning, stemming from the sense of sails and rigging being literally carried from the ship by wind or wave and therefore, by extension applying to other fixtures and even personnel. Note that the form can vary so that the subject may be the vessel itself:

- 1 in a squall she carried away her main top gallant-mast; unfortunately, one brave seaman fell over with it and was drowned (MTC/N/NC1805)

Or an external cause, for example, wind, wave, cannonball, etc.

- 2 the Ship lay a miserable wreck ; one wave had carried away her stern Boat, unshipped her rudder, and washed overboard her quarter boards, binnacle, and round-house (MTC/N/NC1805)

Or, rarely in the MTC data, it may be used intransitively

- 4 The consequence was that a furious squall took her aback, and had not the jibboom and then the upper spars carried away under the terrific strain, she would have gone to the bottom. (MTC/HF/LB/PIG)

In the BNC, there are just five examples of this use, none of which is in a maritime context as found in the MTC, although four refer to damage caused to land structures by the sea, e.g.

- 3 The port of Anjer quite simply ceased to exist as the succession of great waves washed over it, carrying away all the flimsy wooden buildings that made up the town. (BNC/ASR)

In all of these instances, the subject is the external cause,

Literal (Verb + Adverb)

In the MTC, in its literal, non-phrasal use, meaning to transport something from one place to another, CARRY AWAY is used 77 times (21%)

- 4 Fifty of the men were sent back; and the squadron set sail, carrying away the five pressed men, and leaving the men of the 'Baltimore,' from the captain down to the smallest cabin-boy, smarting under the sense of an indignity and insult offered to the flag under which they served. (MTC/HNF/WA/USN)

In the BNC this use accounts for 173 instances (38%)

- 5 Then Mr Vulcan returned from London as he said he would to arrange the funeral.
Everybody in the district came out to watch the coffin being carried away.
(BNC/CDM)

However, this 'literal' use includes both physical transportation, in the sense of materials or people, and five instances in the MTC where it refers to abstract ideas:

- 6 Each of them seemed to carry away his own impression, to carry it away with him like a secret (MTC/HF/JC/2) and six in the BNC:

- 7 What is it that we carry away with us when we leave a gallery that creates a desire in us to paint, to draw or simply to doodle (BNC/J1K)

IN the MTC, there are 27 instances (7%) of the phrase GET CARRIED AWAY, as a metaphor of emotion, defined in the OED as:

To move forcibly from the firm footing of reason and judgement.

and by the ODP simply as 'lose self-control', and in the MMD as

To become so excited or involved in something that you lose control of your feelings or behaviour.

- 8 He was a man who breathed certainly in the present age, but the half of his life was spent in antiquity or algebra. Once carried away by a problem, or a Greek reminiscence, he passed away, as it were, from his present existence, and everything was unheeded. (MTC/HF/FM/2)

Whereas, in the BNC, 273 (61%) of the occurrences are accounted for by this usage.

- 9 Ruth Rendell and others advise plotting your story carefully in advance so that you don't get carried away by unnecessary detail or a minor character. (BNC/ARJ)

Finally, CARRY AWAY is also used in both corpora to mean 'cause death (through disease or injury)' although this is rare, with just two instances in the MTC and four in the BNC.

- 10 Unless they have physic and a diet that the ship cannot possibly provide in mid-ocean, a whole series of ailments may carry them away.
(MTC/MF/OB/DES)
- 11 In 1485 an epidemic, probably of the 'sweating sickness', carried away two mayors of London, and in the North at Ripon two mayors and six aldermen died in eight days (BNC/HWG)

While there is a strong semantic connection between all of these uses, in terms of a key meaning of removal from one location to another or from one emotional/mental state to another by an external agency, the maritime use is clearly specialised in form, with a specific sense restricted to the maritime domain, not expressed in other domains. It is therefore classified as a technical/ literal ME.

5.4.21 ALL HANDS

MTC: N=529

BNC: N=36

Appendix 2.26.1.2

The OED gives ALL HANDS as a specialised maritime usage, with citations dating from 1669 to 1834:

Hand, n

8 b. spec. Each of the sailors belonging to a ship's crew. all hands: the whole crew.

While Smyth's entry is very brief:

All hands, the whole ship's company (1867:30)

ALL HANDS occurs 529 times in the MTC and 36 times in the BNC. In the MTC, it is a fixed ME in its own right with a specific meaning as defined by Smyth, however it also occurs as a component of various MEs that have highly figurative uses in the modern general discourse, in particular ALL HANDS ON DECK (See 5.7.5) and ALL HANDS TO THE PUMPS (5.7.12)

Literal /Technical uses of other MEs using ALL HANDS are detailed in 5.4.21.1 and 5.4.21.2 below.

5.4.21.1 CALL ALL HANDS

(Appendix 2.26.1.5)

One of the top collocates in the MTC for ALL HANDS (See App 2.25.1.1, Table 28), is BOATSWAIN. The high position is explained by the fact that it was the BOATSWAIN'S (full title Boatswain's Mate) job to co-ordinate and discipline the crew, thus, as (1) below, illustrates, he was the direct link between the officers and 'ALL HANDS'

- 1 'Tell the boatswain to send all hands aft,' went on Mr. Baker; 'and tell one of the youngsters to bring a good lamp here. I want to muster our crowd.'
(MTC/ HF/JC/8)

This leads to the expression 'CALL ALL HANDS', which occurs 32 times in the MTC, but is entirely absent from the BNC.

- 2 'Keep the ship away--keep her broad off!' he called out to the man at the wheel. 'Lay the yards square--call all hands, one of you --Captain Robbins, Mr. Kite, bear a hand up; the bloody proas are aboard us!' .(MTC/ HF/JFC/1)

5.4.21.2 (LOST) WITH ALL HANDS

(Appendix 2.25.1.6)

This expression, in various forms, is found 20 times in the MTC (See appendix for full set of lines). The use is invariably literal, meaning the loss a vessel and its entire crew.

- 1 This day the Betty was reported lost on the Japan grounds, with all hands save the boy and the cook. (MTC/HF/BW/VA)

- 2 The launch, which was a heavy-pulling boat and deeply laden, could not; and in a quarter of an hour we had the misery to see her in the breakers, swallowed up with all hands, together with all the provisions and water for our sustenance. (MTC/ HF/FM/8>)
- 3 After my father left Loch Fyne she disappeared at sea with all hands
(MTC/L/DM/MAC)

In the BNC, there are eight instances of maritime use but two of these are figurative, exploiting maritime resonances rather than being literal technical uses:

- 4 'So, what's it going to be, a life-size model of the Titanic?'
The idea seemed to fit Lucy's current expression, as though all hands had already gone down for the third time.
'Or, aren't I meant to know?' (BNC/G35)

And

- 5 I could have lost my rudder, burnt my boats, turned turtle in a sea of heartbreak or gone down with all hands.
But I didn't.
A lesser detective might have.
Or possibly a merchant seaman.
But not me. (BNC/HTU)

These two are active conventionalised metaphors, exploiting maritime resonances through extended, and somewhat mixed, metaphors. The rest of the data, however, in both the MTC and the BNC, shows (LOST) WITH ALL HANDS to be a literal / technical ME.

5.4.22 ALL STANDING

MTC: N=26

BNC: N=0

Appendix 2.26.1.7

The OED gives definitions of ALL STANDING as both a technical and figurative expression:

24. Naut. to let all stand: to leave a ship fully rigged. all standing, i.e. without dismantling or unrigging; transf. with one's clothes on, dressed; also fig. to pay off, bring up all standing: see quot. 1867; to gybe all standing (see quot. 1976). 1976 Oxf. Compan. Ships & Sea 365/2 To gybe without attending the runners, or to do so involuntarily, is known as to 'gybe all-standing', and is dangerous.

Similarly, Smyth gives both literal and figurative uses:

ALL STANDING. Fully equipped or with clothes on. To be brought up all standing to be suddenly checked or stopped without any preparation – Paid off all standing, without unrigging or waiting return stores: perhaps recommissioned the next day or hour. (1867:31)

The ME does not occur at all in the BNC. The MTC has examples of all four usages suggested by Smyth, as the lines below illustrate.

- 1 The next morning, the admiral sent for O'Brien, and told him confidentially ... that there was some hitch about his having the 'Semiramis', and that orders had come down to pay her off, all standing, and examine her bottom, if Captain O'Brien had not joined her.
(MTC/HF/FM/7)
- 2 But I gave it up, and crawled into my bunk instead, boots and hat on, all standing (it did not matter; everything was soaking wet, a heavy sea having burst the poop skylights the night before)...(MTC/HF/JC/3)
- 3 The second night out, the ship struck, in fair weather, and a moderate sea, on a mud-bank; and brought up all standing.
(MTC/HF/JFC/1)
- 4 The liberated seamen once more pushed forward, no longer guided by Isabella, who had got as far as her knowledge of the place extended, and were again, in nautical language, 'brought up all standing.' A priest, returning from the death-bed of one of his flock, saw them gliding along silently and in 'Indian file.'⁴¹ (MTC/HF/NA/YAR)

The expression has four key meanings in the MTC:

ALL STANDING

- Sense 1: pertaining to a ship: with all masts and rigging set up / fully equipped Sense 2: Personal: fully dressed

BROUGHT UP ALL STANDING

- Sense 3: pertaining to a ship: suddenly stopped without warning
 Sense 4: personal: stopped suddenly/ surprised

Assuming the original source to have been the technical expression (sense 1), sense 2 may be regarded as a simple transfer from the maritime to the personal domain or it may be considered an extension of the sense of fully rigged/equipped ship to fully clothed (equipped) man. Note that the terms rig and to be rigged out also referred metaphorically to sailors' uniforms (Smyth 1867:573), although they are now more widely used in the general discourse,

- 5 Well, I applied and was accepted, rigged out with clothes, shoes etc and sent to a large country house near Burton on Trent for training..(BNC/K4T)
- 6 Take the kid to the big stores and they'd be rigged out from top to bottom.
(BNC/B24)

⁴¹ Note the marking of the figurative use of the expression in citation 4, above, taken from Nathaniel Ames' Old Sailor's Yarns (1833), where the maritime origin of the expression is specifically highlighted by the author, suggesting an acknowledgement of the specialised use of the term.

ALL STANDING appears to have remained a purely maritime expression in both its literal and figurative uses. Sense 3 has transferred from the technical sense of a vessel being stopped in full career with all rigging in place and all sail set, which would generally be disastrous to masts and rigging and could lead to the loss of the ship, to sense 4 where the idea is one of personal shock, with a similar meaning to TAKEN ABACK (5.7.3.1). Unlike TAKEN ABACK, however, BROUGHT UP ALL STANDING does not appear to have been adopted in the general discourse and the set of expressions remain as technical MEs, despite the transference from ship to human subject. In its figurative use, the MCM mapping is consistent with PERSON = SHIP and LIFE= VOYAGE

5.5 Transfer

Transfers are expressions that are maritime in origin and often remain in current usage in the maritime domain, but which have also been adopted into other domains. In particular, MEs have been adopted into the domain of transport, especially aviation and, by extension to science fiction writing and the aerospace industries. Thus aircraft are described in maritime terms through the use of words such as PORT, STARBOARD, FORE, AFT, STERN, CABIN, RUDDER, while the American airline, Pan Am, named their aircraft CLIPPERS, in celebration of the fast transatlantic sailing ships of the nineteenth century. A space flight, particularly in the domain of science fiction, may be described in terms of a VOYAGE and a spacecraft may DOCK with another SHIP or arrive at a space PORT and may be described as part of a FLEET, and have a HULL and a BRIDGE. Generally, in these domains, the personnel and command structure will also reflect maritime usage: CREW, STEWARD, PURSER, PILOT, NAVIGATOR, CAPTAIN, COMMODORE, ADMIRAL and so forth.

Where such terms are used, their key meaning changes very little, only the context of their use is altered, so that, while, strictly speaking an expression may be classed as a metaphor, because its original referent is maritime, in effect, there is no material difference in meaning, other than the domain change.

Key features of transfers are:

- Move from source domain to new domain
- No change in key meaning.
- Not regarded as metaphorical.
- May map onto maritime conceptual metaphors.
- May be a member of a group of transferred terms, where the target domain adopts source terminology; e.g. Maritime – Aviation

This group mainly comprises a number of adverbial expressions, including ABEAM, ABREAST, AFT, AMIDSHIPS, ASTERN. Despite their transparently maritime origins, these expressions do not exploit maritime resonances and rarely feature in extended maritime metaphors. Some expressions, such as ABOARD, have transferred to new transport domains in this way, but have also become fully metaphorised in other, more abstract uses.

5.5.1 AFT

MTC: N =1974; F = 226

BNC: N =174; F= 2.1

Keyness = 8192

Appendix 2.20

According to the OED, AFT originates from:

‘the Germanic base of Gothic afta behind, past), ... [and is] of uncertain and disputed origin’.

The expression dates back to Old English and its maritime use is attested from the 16th century, while the related expression ABAFT is cited from the 14th Century (See 5.4.1). The OED classifies it as ‘orig. naut.’, with the definition:

A. adv.

a. in or near the rear part or stern of a ship or (also more recently) the rear of an aircraft, spacecraft, etc.

b. Towards the stern or into the rear part of a ship or (also more recently) the rear of an aircraft, spacecraft, etc.

B adj.

Of, relating to, or situated in the rear part of a ship, aircraft, spacecraft, etc.

Also: (of a wind) coming from the rear.

The MMD defines AFT as:

Adjective, Adverb

In or towards the back part of a ship or plane

And similarly the ODP gives at, near, or towards the stern of a ship or tail of an aircraft:

Smyth (1867:24) describes AFT as ‘a Saxon word’, being the opposite of FORE and as an abbreviation of ABAFT (See 5.4.1).

In the corpus evidence, FORE is the highest ranked collocate in both corpora: MTC = 325 / BNC = 43 (See 5.5.1.1 below). Other collocates include the names of ship’s captains, whose station of command was invariably AFT, and the parts of a ship. The high frequency of the term demonstrates the maritime nature of the expression; in the MTC, the word is used across the entire spectrum of texts represented in the corpus and is always used in its literal technical / locational sense.

- 1 About ten miles off on our larboard side a fine clear evening with showers at a distance. A fine breeze right aft. The sun is setting.

(MTC/L/RT/TAT)

- 2 There was another watertight, door at the after end of the watertight passage through the bunker immediately aft of 'D' bulkhead.
(MTC/HNF/CH/TI)

In the BNC, maritime terms such as COCKPIT, CABIN, DECK occur in the top ten collocates, generally being applied to hi-tech racing yachts, and in aviation contexts, along with COMPARTMENT, CYCLIC and TRIM.

- 3 First offerings include Speed Spats and a Speed Slipper, respectively fairings which fit aft of the aircraft's main- and nose-wheel wells, flap hinge fairings called Speed Splitters are being developed. (BNC/BNV)

Of 174 instances of AFT in the BNC, 88 are maritime (mainly yachting), 61 are in the aviation domain, with the remaining 24 comprising a variety of uses including railways, kite construction, motoring, hats and power tools, e.g.

- 4 Of more use us the rounded front handle, which twists on to the neck of the body, just aft of the chuck, and serves to hold the depth stop.(BNC/CLG)

The clusters analysis (See App. 2.20: table 20) shows that the range of patterns occurring around AFT in the BNC is very restricted when compared with those found in the MTC. The list highlights the prominence of FORE/FORWARD AND AFT in the MTC and of FORE AND AFT in the BNC.

5.5.1.1 FORE/FORWARD AND AFT

MTC: N = 437; BNC: N = 45

Appendix 2.20.1

The OED cites examples of this as a fixed expression dating from 1626. It gives a number of specific meanings in maritime usage as adverb, adjective and noun, generally glossed as from front to back or stem to stern of a vessel. Later citations (1940) also show the term being applied to a particular style of 'field service cap'.

As well as its purely locational/ directional meaning, in the MTC, FORE AND AFT is also used to express hierarchical relationships. The captain of a ship and his officers tending to remain AFT by the helm, to direct the ship, while the men worked 'for'ard'; hence the expression 'to sail before the mast', as in Richard Henry Dana's title Two Years Before the Mast (1840), which is an account of the author's experiences of working as a common sailor. (1) below, comes from a sea shanty about a pugnacious Irishman, ready to take on any officer or man on board, regardless of rank, a statement tantamount to mutiny.

- 1 The mate he came up on the deck, and to the crew did say:
 'Where is that Irish son of a gun who stowed himself away?'
 'I'm here,' says bold McCarthy, 'and as I've said before,
 I'll fight any man that's fore or aft on The City of Baltimore.'
 Traditional shanty (MTC/ SS/094)

In the MTC, FORE occurs with AFT 312 times in the L2 position and FORWARD occurs within five words to the left of AFT 125 times. These are set patterns of binary opposites, but while FORE AND AFT appears to be very fixed in form, with variants in structure being very rare, the structure of FORWARD + AFT juxtapositions is much more flexible, although the collocational preference or tendency to co-selection (Sinclair, 2004:174) of the two words is very strong (see Appendix 2.20.1: fig.117).

- 2 'Carry on Mr Rogers,' he said coldly, 'I have the deck.' Drinkwater walked forward and Rogers turned aft to where Midshipman Dalziell was gathering up his signal book and slate. 'I have the deck,' mimicked Rogers and found Dalziell smiling conspiratorially at him.
 (MF/RW/DRI)

A range of constructions occurs, which includes negatives: neither-nor,

- 3 then, finding the flames approaching so rapidly that I could neither get forward nor aft, I was obliged to heave myself overboard and cling to the spar for a short time, (MTC/N/LOM) and comparatives: same depth forward as aft, and extended cross-clause structures such as:

- 4 When that six-inch shell struck Artemis's side they were hardly aware of it forward on the bridge, but aft in 'X' turret there could be no misunderstanding of what had happened (MTC/MF/CSF/2) and set sequences of orders:

- 5 'Cast off forward, cast off aft,' he called to the two men on the jetty.
 (MTC/ MF/DP/3)
- 6 Hugh ordered, 'Shove off for'ard and aft!' Sunlight glittered on the boathooks as they were shipped. 'Oars forward! Give way together!' (MTC/ MF/AF/1)

In the BNC, FORE/FORWARD and AFT is applied in a variety of domains to a variety of objects, including aircraft, trains, cars, kites, power tools, guitars and Hi Fi speaker systems, e.g.:

- 7 My going-away present to them had been a pair of inflatable yellow wheel clamps which I'd attached front and aft to their VW Golf. (BNC/HTL)
- 8 The SD Ribbon is tall and slender, matched by a comparatively shallow fore-aft dimension which in earlier incarnations made the system rather unstable (BNC/BMC).

There are innovative uses:

- 9 This is taken from a recipe for Persian chicken stuffed with dried fruit. The quantity given will stuff a 5kg/10lb turkey fore and aft, as you do not want to cram the bird to bursting. (BNC/C9F)

However, there is no metaphorical development other than a change of domain; the actual key meaning of the expression remains unaltered.

There are two instances of the expression's figurative use:

- 10 Mrs Lane was there just below her; she could see the top of the round, erect, crisply waved head of iron-grey hair, and the bountiful bulges, fore and aft, of the pocket-clipper figure below. (BNC/H8L)

Text 10 is an innovative metaphor, that exploits the resonances generated by the initial image of 'Crisply waved head of iron grey hair' with the salient features of curving sails, bows and stern of a clipper ship and the ample curves of the subject, so that the ME, FORE AND AFT, fits naturally into the maritime imagery. Although this particular usage may be regarded as innovative, the comparison of the female figure and the salient features of a sailing ship are by no means innovative exploitations:

- 11 She was round in the counter and bluff in the bow,
So I took in all sail and cried, 'Way enough now.'
(Shanty, Trad.) (MTC/ SS/010)

In Text 12, the ME is used literally within an extended maritime simile about a football team.

- 12 The Telegraph commented: 'As Sir Alf [pictured] watched his team begin their first game together since last November he must have felt like a yachtsman who takes the winter covers off his boat, eases it into the water and finds it has sprung leaks fore, aft and midships.' (BNC/AKE)

However, 'fore, aft and midships' is used here in its technical sense within the figure of speech and so is not, of itself, metaphorical.

The variant, FORWARD AND AFT, only occurs six times in the BNC, of which just one instance is maritime, and four are from technical aviation texts, e.g.

- 13 It is not always realised how little spinning is carried out during the test flying of a new type of glider.
Entries are made with every different kind of control input: full in-spin aileron, full out-spin aileron, airbrakes in and out, c.g. forward and c.g. aft, etc., using the standard method of recovery to stop the spin. (BNC/A0H)

In none of these uses, in the BNC, with the exception of the innovative metaphors discussed, is there any exploitation of maritime resonances, while the increasing fixedness of form suggests the term has become idiomatic. Because it is still current in the maritime discourse it remains a transparent expression. There is no change in meaning between the source maritime term and its target uses in the BNC, regardless of domain, thus these expressions are classified as transfers rather than metaphorical exploitations.

5.5.2 ASTERN (adv. & prep.)

MTC: N=1007; F=15.23

BNC: N=72; F=0.84

K=4272

Appendix 2.47

According to the OED, ASTERN has roots in Middle English: stearn, stearno, stærn, stern, probably deriving from the Old Norse stjorn, which originally referred to the steering oar or rudder of a ship and thus, by extension to the rear of the vessel itself. It is given as a purely nautical term, defined as 'Of position: In or at the stern' and 'Hence, in the rear, behind.' with citations dating back to 1627.

Smyth gives:

Any distance behind a vessel; in the after-part of the ship; in the direction of the stern, and therefore the opposite of ahead.--To drop astern, is to be left behind,--when abaft a right angle to the keel at the main-mast, she drops astern. (1867:58)

In the MTC, ASTERN is a purely technical term used exactly as defined in the OED and by Smyth. In the BNC, the majority of the 76 concordance lines found are maritime, however, there are also 19 from aviation contexts.

The ODP also provides a definition for:

LINE AHEAD : Nautical. A formation in which a number of ships follow one another in a line

And

LINE ASTERN: a formation in which a number of aircraft or ships follow one another in a line

Note that the ODP puts aircraft before ships in this definition, and that LINE ASTERN does not appear in the OED (original entry dated from 1885) or in Smyth.

In the BNC, IN LINE ASTERN, occurs eight times, making LINE a top collocate of ASTERN.

Six of the occurrences are about aircraft e.g.

- 2 The Hurricanes dived on them, but at once the escorting fighters were on their tails; at least two 'convoys' were noted of Ju87, Hurricane, Bf109E in line astern, all firing. (BNC/CA8)

Text 2 is interesting because it adopts another ME, CONVOYS, in this description of an aerial dogfight over Malta, during WWII, with three aircraft involved; a German bomber (Ju87), followed by a British fighter (Hurricane) followed by a German fighter (Bf109E). The use of IN LINE ASTERN, linked with CONVOY in this text, about the aerial campaign to defend Malta during the war, makes the maritime reference stronger, particularly because at the time of this engagement, maritime convoys were the only means of supplying the island.

Only one line in the BNC uses IN LINE ASTERN to refer to ships sailing in formation:

- 3 He was serving on the battleship HMS Agincourt during the Battle of Jutland and related how they were in line astern to The Queen Mary and, when the latter was hit in the magazine and blew up, they sailed over the spot without feeling a thing. (BNC/B22) while another refers to horse-drawn trams in Glasgow.

- 4 They were all there on the last day, even down to the original horse-drawn trams, rattling or gliding past in stately line-astern, a fleet from decades gone, (BNC/ALL)

Note the parallel in Text 4 with the expression IN LINE ABREAST (5.5.8), which was also used with reference to trams in Blackpool. More recently the expression appears to have been adopted in the field of motor racing, as demonstrated by these lines from the official Formula One Grand Prix website:

- 1 the two cars were in line astern for most of the first stint.
- 2 Jaguars and then in line astern Saubers, Jordans and Minardis.
- 3 round and round in line astern, unable to overtake. ...
- 4 footage of cars in line astern with no sign of passing on the
- 5 cars stay in 'line astern' until the start/finish is

IN the MTC, the sequence LINE ASTERN occurs ten times, e.g.

- 5 he ordered by signal, that she should assume a station as most convenient, without regard to the order of battle; and afterwards sent verbal directions to Lord Northesk, by the Captain of the Sirius, to break through the enemy's line astern of the fourteenth ship...(MTC/N/NC/1806) the MWE, IN LINE ASTERN, however, occurs only once, and this from modern novelist, Monsarrat.

- 6 Make to Goliath and Zealous: 'Rejoin me and take station ahead.'
'Make to all others: 'Form up in line astern as planned.'
- 'Make to all: 'Prepare for battle and for anchoring by the stem.'
(MTC/<MF/NM/MM1)

The phrase is not mentioned by Smyth, in contrast to his treatment of IN LINE ABREAST (See 5.5.8 above), suggesting that this is possibly a modern adaptation rather than an historical ME.

There is one metaphorical use of ASTERN in the data from the BNC:

- 1 On Thursday Mr Major reached his majority. He is at last, and to his evident relief, his own man. The constraints of the past slip astern.
(BNC/AK9)

This exploits the MCMs of the SHIP OF STATE, CAMPAIGN = SEA VOYAGE, and POLITICS = SEA. The salient features of the metaphor can be mapped as: John Major's political campaign = sea voyage beset with navigational difficulties (= constraints) now navigated past (= slip astern). There are no other maritime references or resonances in the surrounding co-text, suggesting that these MCMs are well established within the genre of political journalism and transparent enough to stand alone. This particular instance can therefore be regarded as a transparent, active conventionalised metaphor.

ASTERN has moved from being a purely maritime expression into the domain of aviation and the fixed MWE, IN LINE ASTERN, has developed from the original maritime use of ASTERN, to be adopted more widely into the transport domain, particularly in aviation and motor racing. There is no evidence in the data of extended maritime metaphors, with the possible exception of the reference to trams in Text 4, or of exploitation of particular salient features of the ME, other than the physical shape of the formation. ASTERN is therefore classified as a transfer.

5.5.3 ABOARD

MTC: N=1397; F=160

BNC: N=829; F=10

K=3864

Appendix 2.4

In a randomly generated sample of 200 concordance lines, 26% of usages of ABOARD in the BNC are transfers, referring to a range of transport methods from trams to horses:

- 1 When her tram clanked to a halt in front of her Maggie climbed aboard and went upstairs. (BNC/AN7)
- 2 FRANKIE Dettori completed a 80-1 double aboard Palace Pageant in the Lowdham Conditions Stakes and Ewald in the Sandiacre Handicap at Nottingham yesterday. (BNC/K3A)

Other than the domain change the key meaning of being transported on or in vehicle, remains unaltered.

5.5.3.1 WELCOME ABOARD

MTC: N=11

BNC: N=21

Appendix 2. 4.4

In the MTC, WELCOME ABOARD is invariably used as a literal, formulaic greeting to someone joining or visiting a ship. In the BNC however, there are five occurrences of the expression applied to vehicles ranging from cars to spacecraft.

- 1 I stood in the middle of the road, conscious of my affrontery, flagging it down with a bundle of banknotes.
The driver stopped and welcomed me aboard. (BNC/AT3)
- 2 The air hostess smiled.
'Welcome aboard, sir.
Would you like a newspaper?' (BNC/GW5)

The key meaning of the formulaic greeting found in the MTC remains unchanged and only the domain varies, thus these uses are classified as transfers.

5.5.3.2 JUMP ABOARD

MTC: N=5

BNC: N=2

Appendix 4.3

- 1 Warhurst was originally set to jump aboard the Kenny Dalglish bandwagon for £3 million last month, but the deal was put on ice when Wednesday failed to land Brian Deane from neighbours Sheffield United as replacement. (BNC/K2D)
- 2 I only say 'cos the Telegraph have printed some stuff today for their league, and I thought it would be a good idea if we jumped aboard their system/rules etc.
The results/stats for each player will be printed each Wednesday starting next week. (BNC/K2D)

These are the only two examples of this phrase in the BNC. At first glance, both are metaphorical extensions of the source, literal, expression of JUMP ABOARD (a vessel) as found five times in the MTC, e.g.

- 3 -shove her bows off, Sam, and jump aboard--so, pull round your larboard oars--now give way together.' (MTC/ HF/NA/YAR)

There is a transfer from the maritime concrete domain to the abstractions of (1) a business enterprise and (2) the adoption of a system for scoring and regulating a fantasy football league. However, on closer inspection, (1) is difficult to classify as a maritime metaphor; Bandwagon occurs 176 times in the BNC as the head of variants of the metaphorical expression JUMP ON THE BANDWAGON:

an activity or cause that has suddenly become fashionable or popular (ODP).

and is used five times with ABOARD, suggesting that ABOARD, in this context, is a transfer referring to bandwagon, rather than being a metaphor in its own right. (2) initially appears to be more maritime but also turns out to be to be a compressed form of the bandwagon metaphor, when compared with:

- 4 From 1983 onwards nearly everyone in the computer world jumped aboard the OSI standards bandwagon. (BNC/EF6)

Thus both these instances can be classified as transfers.

5.5.4 ABEAM

MTC: N=155; F=1.77

BNC: N=16; F=0.02

Keyness = 633.77

Appendix 2.3

The OED classifies ABEAM (adv.) as a maritime expression, which was adopted for use with aircraft early in the 20th century, with cited uses from 1789 to the present day. It provides the definition:

(Naut.) 'On a line at right angles to a ship's course; opposite the middle of a vessel. Later also of an aircraft.'

The ODP gives

Abeam (Adverb):

on a line at right angles to a ship's or an aircraft's length

Abeam of opposite the middle of (a ship or aircraft)

The MMD has no definition for the term.

In the BNC, this adoption is borne out by the corpus evidence, where 12 of the 16 occurrences of the expression are in the aviation domain, with just four being maritime uses.

In the MTC, 45 of 155 occurrences (29%) of ABEAM are used with the preposition OF + OBJECT as in:

- 1 The frigate was abeam of the headlands into the main river; slowly the fort drew abeam. There was not a soul in sight and the very air was pregnant with the desolation of withdrawal. (MTC/ MF/RW/DRI)

However, the remainder use ABEAM without a prepositional object e.g.

- 2 The wind was abeam; and the frigate, which proved herself but a crank ship, heeled over till her hammock-nettings dipped in the seething, foaming waters, which bubbled and hissed up through the lee scuppers. (MTC/ HF/WK/MORT)
- 3 The 'Spray' rounded Montauk Point early in the afternoon; Point Judith was abeam at dark; she fetched in at Beavertail next. (MTC/ HNF/JS/ALO)

In the BNC, the construction with the prepositional 'of' occurs only once, and this too is a maritime usage, as opposed to an aviation context, where the preposition is always omitted:

- 4 Timing for the outbound leg is defined as starting when the aircraft is abeam the holding point, or when the outbound heading is reached, whichever comes later. (BNC/G3K)
- 5 a quick reference to EUR 2 shows an air to air refuelling area of 2600 square miles starting abeam Bristol and Bournemouth and ending just before Land's End, restricting the air from FL 80 to 180. (BNC/ECX)

There are no examples of this abbreviated construction in the MTC, suggesting that a contraction in form has taken place during the adaption from the maritime into the aviation domain. Despite this change in phrasal structure, there is no change in key meaning or extension involved in the move from maritime to aviation use, neither is there is evidence of exploitation of maritime resonances. The expression is therefore classified as a transfer.

There are two related expressions: BEAM ENDS and BROAD-BEAMED / BROAD IN THE BEAM both of which have become metaphorised; these are dealt with in 0 and 0 respectively.

5.5.5 AWNING

MTC: N=89; F=9.81

BNC: N=119; F=1.36

K=119

Appendix 2.53

According to the OED, this was originally a purely nautical term.

A roof-like covering of canvas or similar material, used as a shelter from sun, rain, etc.; esp. above the deck of a vessel.

2. transf.

a. Naut. That part of the poop-deck which is continued forward beyond the bulk-head of the cabin; hence awning-deck(ed).

Citations date from 1624, referring to the use of AWNINGS for shelter on board ship, or of ship's crews rigging sails as AWNINGS to provide shelter ashore. Smyth (1867:64) defines the AWNING as both a temporary shelter and also a specific area of the poop (rear) deck, which extends from the poop cabin to provide shelter.

All the concordances in the MTC refer to awnings on ships or boats, and frequently include specialised technical terms such as furl, awning stanchion, poop and fo'c'sle awnings.

In the BNC, there are 15 references (12%) to awnings in a maritime context:

- 1 Headsail roller reefing and slab reef mainsails make light of strong winds; bathing ladders, cockpit cushions and sun-awnings provide essential comfort. (BNC/G2B)

For the remainder, the descriptions frequently refer to the colours and design of awnings, generally in the context of caravanning and camping, or of shops and outdoor cafes and restaurants, emphasising their decorative function as much as their functionality, in a way that is rarely seen in the MTC data.

- 2 Outside the shop, with its gay blue and white awning, two ladies were chatting and another one was visible in the telephone box. (BNC/C8D)

AWNING is classified as a transfer, its key meaning and function remain unchanged, despite the adoption of the term for temporary open sided shelters on land. There is no evidence of maritime resonances being exploited.

5.5.6 AMIDSHIPS / (MIDSHIPS)

MTC: N=246; F=28.15 MTC: N=97

BNC: N=20; F=0.21 BNC: N10

K=1041

Appendix 2.34

The OED shows AMIDSHIPS to be a purely maritime expression, its roots in Norse and Old English as on-middan, although the OED citations are relatively late, with the earliest being 1692.

In the middle of a ship; rarely, to or towards the middle of the ship.

Along with MIDSHIPS, which occurs 97 times in the MTC, this is a highly specialised term. The OED gives later, figurative, extensions of the meaning with citations, including Partridge (1937), who lists the term as meaning the solar plexus as early as the eighteenth century. Smyth gives only technical definitions and makes no reference to any figurative uses.

In MTC, the two expressions AMIDSHIPS and MIDSHIPS are only ever used in their literal senses. The key difference in usage for the two words is the tendency for MIDSHIPS to be used in sequences of helm orders:

- 1 A diversion to port. An impromptu zigzag to throw their range out before Nile became the next Aunt Sally.
 'Midships!
 'Midships. Helm's amidships, sir.' (MTC/MF/AF/1)

In the BNC, the 20 concordances for AMIDSHIPS show the majority of uses to be maritime (15 lines), while there are two aeronautical lines and three referring to bodies (one feline and two human).

- 2 'It s a Hell of a squeeze, but I think I can wriggle through.
 No, blast, I'm stuck...amidships.
 My damned hips.... (BNC/ACE)

Similarly the ten instances of MIDSHIPS show a mixture of maritime and aeronautical uses.

- 3 Open gun positions were located in the bow, midships and extreme tail and provision made to carry bombs beneath the lower wings.(BNC/CGJ)

It is worth noting that the three aeronautical instances refer to flying boats, hence the use of bow as well as midships in text 3). When used in the aviation domain, there is no change in key meaning or in form, thus, in this use, (A)MIDSHIPS can be classified as a transfer.

When used to describe a human/animal body, the key meaning of AMIDSHIPS as the middle is not substantially altered by the transfer to the human/animal domain. The term maintains its transparency, as the source expression remains extant. The ME does, however, exploit the MCM of PERSON = SHIP, and, when used to refer to the living body exploits a number of maritime resonances. Note, in text 4, casualty toll mounts, peonies beheaded, greenhouse smashed, and struck amidships are all used to call up an image of a sea battle.

- 4 In our back garden, the casualty toll mounts.
To date, three peonies have been beheaded and a pane in next door's greenhouse smashed.
The cat, although nervous, appears unharmed by the tennis ball which has just struck it amidships. (BNC/CH5)

And similarly, in text 5, we have cannonball and hit

- 5 Mungo spun round to see a thin, stooped figure in blue dungarees.
He looked as though a cannonball had hit him amidships and left him with a hollow chest and a permanent arch in his back. (BNC/ACV)

Furthermore, the target maps onto certain salient perceptual features of the source, such as the idea of the stomach as the 'engine room' of the body, and the effect of a blow resonates with the idea of the effect of an impact on vital components of a ship, such as the command centre and engines, housed in the mid-section of a ship, to protect them, and the physical outcome of the vessel breaking its back and 'folding-up' as the result of being 'struck amidships'.

- 5 The ROSS-SHIRE left Cardiff on Tuesday with coal, early on Wednesday morning when off Trevoise Head, near Newquay she collided with the DUGUESCLIN from Rouen for Swansea in ballast, which was struck amidships and went down immediately. (MTC/N/LM1899)

I therefore regard this particular use of AMIDSHIPS as an extension rather than a simple transfer; the exploitation of maritime resonances and the transparency of the target making it an active conventionalised metaphor.

5.5.7 STOW* AWAY (V)/STOWAWAY (N)

Frequencies	MTC	BNC
STOW* AWAY	N=116;	N=46
STOWAWAY*	N=42;	N=29

Appendix 2.51.4

The OED definitions (see Appendix 2 for full entry) can be glossed overall as meaning ‘to put away’, either literally, with regard to goods and materials, or figuratively, when referring to food or drink being consumed, or words, arguments or noise being made. The non-maritime uses appear to pre-date the maritime ones, according to the OED citations (earliest 1362), although the OED also notes that the nautical use of the expression is ‘Possibly influenced by the (etymologically unconnected) Dutch stouwen in the same sense.’

STOWING HAMMOCKS. Placing them in a neat and symmetrical order in the hammock netting (Smyth 1867:660)

Smyth contains no other definitions for STOW, STOW AWAY or the nominal form STOWAWAY, despite its clearly specialised maritime use as illustrated in the OED and the MTC data.

The ODP gives definitions of:

Stow: verb: (with object and adverbial) pack or store (an object) carefully and neatly in a particular place.

Phrasal Verb

And:

Stow away: conceal oneself on a ship, aircraft, or other passenger vehicle in order to travel secretly or without paying the fare

Both of the citations given in support allude to boats or ships.

In the MTC, STOW* AWAY has three main meanings as a verb (trans): ‘to put things away on a ship or boat’ or, as a phrasal verb (intrans/refl.) ‘to hide (self) illegally aboard a ship when it sails’, and a nominal form: STOWAWAY.

STOW AWAY (VERB + ADVERB)

- 1 On the second day out, with everything lashed and all running gear safely stowed away below hatches we butted straight into it. (MTC/ L/DM/MAC)

This use is sometimes applied to personnel as well as cargo or possessions:

- 2 But after the confusion had subsided, and part of our men were snugly stowed away in the American ship, and the remainder found themselves kindly used in their own, the utmost good feeling began to prevail.
(MTC/L/SL/THIR)

STOW AWAY (PHRASAL VERB)

- 3 The practice of 'stowing away', or hiding about a vessel until after the passage tickets have been collected, in order to procure, by this fraudulent means, a free passage across the Atlantic, is stated to be very common to ships leaving London and Liverpool for the United States.
(MTC/N/ES/ILN)

STOWAWAY (NOUN)

- 4 If a stowaway be concealed in a barrel, it is to be presumed that he has been placed with his head uppermost, and the searchers, upon this hint, whenever they have a suspicion, deliberately proceed to turn the barrel bottom upwards. (MTC/N/ILN/8)

In total, STOW* AWAY accounts for 116 lines in the MTC, all but one of which can be classified as literal maritime uses. The one exception being the figurative use of the expression to mean 'eat food', although still used in a maritime context.

- 5 'Orders is orders,' answered Job; 'but just you keep a bright look out on the stair while we're below, and as soon as we've stowed away some grub, we'll take it watch and watch, and go up and sit on 'em' (MTC/HF/WK/MORT)

In the BNC, there are 17 maritime uses that are in line with those found in the MTC. The remaining 29 occurrences appear in a range of contexts. In most lines, the non-maritime use is merely a transference of the phrase from a nautical context to some form of non-maritime setting, so that STOW AWAY has become synonymous with 'put away' or, in the phrasal verb form, with hiding on board any form of transport from buses, to space craft. None of the non-maritime lines in the BNC exploit extended metaphors or maritime resonances; there is no change in key meaning and therefore STOW AWAY is classified as a transfer.

There is one example of more abstract, figurative use:

- 6 Ludens, in his present highly textured frame of mind, stowed away this significant memory as not at present relevant to his proceedings.
(BNC/APM)

which exploits the conceptual metaphor of MIND = CONTAINER, however, there is nothing in the co-text to suggest any conscious exploitation of the maritime origins of the expression. Thus, while it is an extension of the primary sense of physically storing material in a physical space to the abstract concept of storing memories, it still retains the key meaning safe storage. This specific usage could be classified as dormant conventionalised metaphor, although my own interpretation is that it remains a transfer.

In the BNC, the nominal form, STOWAWAY, has taken on new meaning and strong negative prosody, in the light of the topical debate on illegal immigration, with five out of 29 instances using the term in news items, where the STOWAWAY becomes both illegal immigrant (7) and victim of exploitation and violence (8):

- 7 The end of the line
A STOWAWAY who jumped ship was caught when he tried to call relatives in North Africa from a motorway phone.
Algerian Karim Ederesi, 20, didn't know the emergency phone had connected him with police.
Within minutes he had been picked up by a patrol car on the M5 in Gloucestershire.
He had just escaped from a ship at Sharpness docks. (BNC/CEN)

- 8 Crew dumps stowaways
THE crew of a cargo ship were arrested yesterday on suspicion of tossing seven stowaways overboard and shooting them.
One Ghanain claiming to have escaped the ordeal alerted police when the Ukrainian ship landed at Le Harve, France.
The surviving stowaway said his friends on board the MacRuby were beaten by six crewmen before being hurled into the Atlantic off Portugal.
(BNC/CEM)

In the ODP, this aspect of negative prosody is further reinforced by the citation chosen to illustrate the definition:

Stowaway (noun): A person who stows away on a passenger vehicle

Many of the drivers complain that they had no reason to suspect their vehicles contained stowaways, and that they are being used as unpaid immigration officials.

In a further five lines, the expression is adjectival, used as a technical description of a type of boat equipment (9) and a particular brand of waterproof clothing (10).

- 9 SWAN 46/053 'CARISSIMA':
Extensively equipped, including stowaway mast/furling headstay, full electronics, delivered new to her present owner in 1986. (BNC/CFT)

- 10 Taking a similar line are The North Face with their Stowaway Jacket and Pants, also in 2-ply Taslan and Gore-Tex. (BNC/ECG)

With the exception of these uses of STOWAWAY as an adjective or trade name, the meaning of STOWAWAY remains unchanged, with usage merely transferring from the maritime into other domains.

5.5.8 IN LINE ABREAST

MTC: N = 10

BNC: N = 13

Appendix 2.5.2

This expression has a specific maritime use which is shown in the OED as

2. Naut. With reference to the disposition of a squadron or other group of ships: with the vessels parallel to one another (usually evenly spaced) in a line at right angles to the direction of travel. Freq. in line abreast. Also in extended use (chiefly Mil.).

ODP

Nautical a formation in which a number of ships travel side by side.

Smyth

'Line abreast' means a fleet advancing or retreating uniformly on a line parallel with the beam.

IN LINE ABREAST occurs ten times in the MTC and includes two instances of its use in an aviation context, describing formations of aircraft, rather than of ships. The expression allows of some variation in structure with adjectival phrases being included as part of the expression.

1 When the time was right, the four destroyers would pivot to port and in line abreast would charge down on the enemy at full speed.
(MTC/MF/DR/1)

2 The first attack developed shortly after 1100 when nine aircraft in close single line abreast formation were seen approaching REPULSE from about Green 50 (50° on the starboard bow) and at a height of about 10,000 feet. (MTC/N/LG1948)

In the BNC, IN LINE ABREAST occurs 13 times (See App. 2.5.2: fig.47) and is more fixed in structure than in the MTC, with only one line admitting an adjectival phrase into the structure.

3 At Ramsay's shouted message, the Scots chivalry formed up from column into as wide a line abreast as the terrain would allow, and wasting no time, advanced at the trot. (BNC/CD8)

Only one occurrence is maritime.

3 THE leading yachts on the second leg of the Whitbread Round the World Race were almost in line abreast yesterday as they approached the finish here (BNC/A8N)

The subject matter of the BNC concordances accords with the military/maritime usage described in the OED and as referred to by Smyth.

- 4 Then advance at the charge, in line abreast, and ride down the usurper's camp. (BNC/CD8)
- 5 The three vehicles jerked to a stop in line abreast and the two panting men halted alongside the one driven by Bob Wallace, the Fire Chief. (BNC/HJD)

Maritime resonances are only specifically exploited in text 6; Dreadnoughts were originally a particular class of naval battleship; this article, however concerns trams in Blackpool.

- 6 South Shore terminus with four Dreadnoughts in line abreast, demonstrating their legendary capacity to absorb crowds. (BNC/B09)

The maritime resonance in the name 'Dreadnought' appears to engender the use of the ME and is reinforced by the seaside context of Blackpool.

The military and other transferred uses of the expression all retain the original maritime key meaning of IN LINE ABREAST and the form has remained effectively fixed apart from the change of subject of the adverbial phrase. With the exception of the article about trams at Blackpool, there is no exploitation of maritime resonances, so that IN LINE ABREAST is classified as a transfer when used outside the maritime domain.

5.6 Conventionalised metaphors

Conventionalised metaphors are expressions that have been adopted from the maritime discourse with new abstract meanings in the general discourse. These are divided into two groups:

1) Dormant Conventionalised Metaphors

These are well-established metaphors, where the relationship between source and target is still discernable but not required in order to interpret the metaphor and metaphorical resonances are not exploited, e.g. WELCOME ABOARD. Such metaphors may be re-activated by the introduction of maritime resonances or themes into the context. The key features of dormant metaphors are:

- a) Domain change
- b) Key meaning change (extension)
- c) Key meaning will be listed as secondary sense in dictionary.
- d) Source and target are polysemous
- e) Salient features of source exploited
- f) Resonances unlikely to be exploited
- g) Knowledge of source is not required or evoked to interpret target
- h) Usually semi-transparent (meaning can be reconstructed without knowledge of source meaning, but may be erroneous in detail)

2) Active Conventionalised Metaphors

These are established metaphors that still retain strong resonances with their source, knowledge of which is required for successful interpretation of the metaphor. Often exploited in extended maritime metaphors, e.g.

KEEP AFLOAT:

It was as if Chapman were a captain trying to keep afloat on a treacherous sea in a small boat that threatened at any moment to spring a leak. (BNC/BOL)

The use of 'active' here is at variance with the definition provided by Goatly (2011:34), who regards only innovative metaphors as being 'active' and all others as inactive. I have taken the viewpoint that it is more useful to understand these metaphors in terms of their effectiveness in evoking resonances within a text.

The key features of active metaphors are:

- a) Domain change
- b) Key meaning change (extension)
- c) Key meaning will be listed as secondary sense in dictionary

- d) Source and target are polysemous
- e) Salient features of source exploited
- f) Resonances exploited through collocation and colligation
- g) Extended maritime metaphors likely in co-text
- h) Transparent

5.6.1 ANCHOR* (N & V)

MTC: N=2434; F=278.52

BNC: N=519; F= 6.08

K= 8928

Appendix: 2.36

The metaphoricity of ANCHOR is discussed at some length in 2.1, where it is used to illustrate various features of metaphoricity and the metaphorical model used in this study. Here, a brief summary of the expression is given.

According to the OED, ANCHOR (N) comes from the Old English Ancor. There are citations from 880 onwards showing clearly its original maritime meaning:

‘An appliance for holding a ship, etc., fixed in a particular place, by mooring it to the bottom of the sea or river.’ (OED, First ed. 1884)

Smyth (1887:38) provides a comprehensive technical definition of ANCHOR and also refers to its figurative use both as noun and verb. In addition to his main entry he also lists a further 20 related compounds based on ANCHOR.

In the BNC, of 1052 concordance lines, just 301 (29 per cent) are used in a maritime context. The maritime application retains its original key meaning. ANCHOR* has subsequently transferred into various new domains, especially in engineering and biology, retaining this essential key meaning of mechanical fixing. The nominal and verbal forms have been extended to provide a number of additional key meanings, generally focusing on the specific salient features of security, fixedness, strength and reliability:

a. Transfer:

- 1 As shelves are added, use the holes in each bracket to anchor shelf to brackets. (BNC/CLG)

b. Extension

- 2 He took the strain like the anchor-man on a rope, pushing hard against his own backward pull (BNC/FP7)

c. Abstraction (Spirituality / Hope / Stability)

Cited in the OED from the 14th century, the symbol of the anchor is believed to have been adopted by early Christians during the first century AD. The formal adoption of the anchor as a Christian symbol may be based on a passage from the bible: Hebrews 6:19: 'We have this hope as an anchor for the soul, firm and secure.' (Kennedy, 1975).

- 3 The anchor in our world today is freedom. Holding us steady in times of change - a symbol of hope to all the world.
And freedom is at the very heart of the idea that is America.
Our anchor has always been faith and family.' (BNC/HKP)

d. Abstraction (Finance / Politics)

- 4 More fundamentally, anchoring the pound to the ERM would, it is argued, link it to the successful anti-inflation policies of the Bundesbank, ensuring low inflation in Britain. (BNC/A4K)
- 5 If Hoare did not go, the Prime Minister would lose his personal position and 'one of our national anchors would have dragged'. (BNC/EFN)

Note the extended metaphor in 5 exploiting the MCM of NATION = SHIP

e. Abstraction (Academic)

- 6 That is, the linguistic categories anchor communication in the real world and in the relationship between speaker and hearer/reader. (BNC/CRV)

f. Abstraction (Computing)

- 7 Ventura is, and will probably always be, document oriented. That means that it knows about things like sections and chapters, tables of contents, indexes and anchored text and graphics. (BNC/G00)

g. Abstraction: (Sport)

- 8 The Dons are anchored at the bottom of the Premier League after crashing to defeat in all three opening matches. (BNC/CH7)

The metaphorical extension of ANCHOR has led to a number of specialisations that are now probably idiomatic.

h. ANCHOR MAN

Literal/Technical

- 9 And er when the anchor man always had his hand on the rope you know and you'd hear him saying, Anchor coming home sir. (BNC/K7E)

Concrete: Climbing/Sport (Transfer)

- 10 Being anchor man, the one at the back of the rope, and because we were walking directly into the sun, I delighted in the shadows of those in front. (BNC/A6T)

Abstraction: TV (Extension)

- 11 He went on to become anchor man for Grandstand for more than 20 years, No. 1 soccer commentator on Match Of The Day and the undisputed star of A Question of Sport. (BNC/CH5)

Abstraction: Sport (Extension)

- 12 If he plays today, the former England skipper is likely to play in front of the back four as anchor man, while his colleagues search for the away goal that would put the dour Muscovites under pressure. (BNC/CH3)

Abstraction: Business (Extension)

- 13 The £27m development is due to open in late summer with C&A the main anchor store. (BNC/K55)

i. ANCHORS = Brakes

There are seven examples of this use of ANCHORS in the BNC, according to the OED, arising in the 1930s among tram drivers. It has now been adopted by the general motoring public and is also used in a variety of non-motoring contexts:

Motoring

- 14 I stood on my anchors and the BMW's much-vaunted braking system came good.
A moment later there was a loud crash aft as someone rear-ended me. (BNC/ BMR)

- 15 I think maybe she jammed the anchors on, because the car didn't sail out into space or anything.' (BNC/HWL)

- 16 ...nine times out of ten it jus it just incenses them to drive even closer. Yeah, exactly and tha that's when you slam your anchors on and they're in the fucking wall! (BNC/KDA)

- 17 so he just kept going, so the pick-up jammed its anchors on, there was a Rover it was coming the other way, the Rover went up the verge. (BNC/KD8)

Sport

- 18 Jim Renwick, had been so intent on chasing and tackling the electrifyingly quick Eric Rush that he had failed to notice a helicopter land on the pitch and it was only when they felt the down-draft from the rotor blades that they put on the anchors. (BNC/K5J)

Horse riding:

- 19 far easier than poor Jazz's problem of trying to stay aboard when Spot, cantering quite easily towards the jump, put his anchors out at the last minute and stopped dead. (BNC/AT4)

Note, in 19, the non-standard form: put his anchors out, perhaps, a more accurate description of casting an anchor, in a maritime sense, which may be a deliberate exploitation of maritime resonances, further reinforced by trying to stay on board. Of the seven examples, three texts exploit maritime resonances through maritime collocations: aft (14), sail (15) and aboard (19).

Colligationally, the structure of these metaphorical uses is identical with the structure used in non-figurative phrases using the synonymous expression, brakes. The top three collocates of brakes are the adverbial particle on and the verb *slam along with synonyms such as *bang, *jam and *stand

- 13 She slammed on her brakes and horn simultaneously as the jeep swerved to miss her, careering off the road and crashing into the gully alongside. (BNC/FRS)
- 14 Most people naively imagine they will stop immediately when they jam on the brakes (BNC/K5C)
- 15 The driver, travelling at some eighty kilometres per hour, had little alternative but to stand on the brakes and swing the bus hard right. (BNC/GOL)

These fixed forms suggest lexicalisation and idiomaticity for this use of ANCHORS, however, the transparency of ANCHOR as a maritime word, means that maritime resonances are still present and may be exploited, thus classifying it as a dormant conventionalised metaphor, at least in those cases where such exploitation occurs.

The full data set from the BNC illustrates very clearly the development of the symbolic use of the anchor, away from its maritime roots into virtually every domain. Even technically specialised maritime forms⁴² are exploited:

⁴² SHEET ANCHOR:

- a. A large anchor, formerly always the largest of a ship's anchors, used only in an emergency.
- b. fig. That on which one places one's reliance when everything else has failed. (OED 2013)

- 6 Every act I took which would have been impossible in my own age served to disperse the sheet-anchors that held my personality. (BNC/HGS)
- 7 We have no concept of their struggles with traffic, map reading or parking; for us they are our sheet anchor and our link with a real life out there beyond this narrow strip of water. (BNC/BMF)

Fixed MWEs using ANCHOR tend to retain their literal maritime meaning in the BNC data:

AT ANCHOR

- 16 They gave a 21-gun salute, played hymns and went on board a coastal yacht, where they spent most of the day alternately at anchor or sailing. (BNC/CA7)

WEIGH* ANCHOR

- 17 We weighed anchor next morning and sailed down the fiord on a calm sea. (BNC/CRJ)

AT ANCHOR occurs 35 times in the BNC, and is always maritime and literal. WEIGH* ANCHOR occurs nine times and is also, always used literally.

⁴³ Occurs only in the plural, suggesting that it is now fully lexicalized and thus has become idiomaticised, however, the presence of extended metaphors in some examples and the transparency of the expression suggest that this is still a dormant conventionalised metaphor.

5.6.2 ASHORE

MTC: N=1824: F=209

BNC: N=552; F= 6

K=6204

Appendix: 2.46

The OED gives two distinct definitions, the first being an obsolete use: 'shore-wise, a-straddle' used in the sense of to shore up or support. The maritime meaning is given as ' , adv. 1. Of motion: To, or on to, the shore; to land.' and ' 2. Of position: On shore, on the land.' These uses are cited from the late 16th and early 17th century and the corpus evidence shows these meanings are still current. Smyth's definition is also very simple:

'Aground, on land. – To go ashore, to disembark from a boat. Opposed to aboard.' (1867:56)

In the MTC, ASHORE is somewhat more nuanced than Smyth's, or indeed the OED's, definition would suggest; it has a number of distinct key meanings:

1: Literal/ technical: Refers to geographical position:

- 1 Saturday dawned warm and sunny. Before the tide returned I slipped ashore for bread and milk and a one-inch O.S. map of the Swale. (MTC/L/CS/SHO)

2: Figurative: 'ashore' as a opposed to 'at sea'

- 2 In a similar situation ashore, a company for example that has directors, managers and a work force, all go home each night (MTC/WT/MA/ID)

The salient features of ASHORE in this metaphorical sense are about conditions of life outside the confines of naval service, and perceived ideas of retirement, rather than mere physical location on land.

3: Literal / technical: 'DRIVE* ASHORE' meaning wreck or disaster.

- 3 The schooner, John, of Runcorn, was driven ashore near St. Bees, but the crew were saved. (MTC/N/NOW/38)

4: Figurative – DRIVE* ASHORE personal (physical ruin)

- 4 I said pretty fair maid it's time to give o'er, betwixt wind and water you've drove me ashore (MTC/SS010)

Where the idea of the physical wrecking or disabling of a ship is translated into sexual exhaustion and, in subsequent verses, the almost inevitable physical consequences of such encounters in terms of disease.

There is also a fixed phrase AFLOAT AND ASHORE that occurs 12 times in the MTC, with four of the uses coming from book or chapter titles, and the rest expressing an idea of generality, which goes beyond mere physical location e.g.:

- 5 not only were press-gangs notoriously abroad both afloat and ashore, but there was little or no secret about another matter, namely that the London police were at liberty to capture any able-bodied suspect, any questionable fellow at large and summarily ship him to dockyard or fleet.
(MTC/HF/HM/1)
- 6 but there is the fact that in listening for upwards of twenty years to the sea-talk that goes on afloat and ashore I have never detected the true note of animosity (MTC/HF/JC/3)
- 7 I am quite aware of the flaws in the above argument, but at least it shows a manual labour act performed both afloat and ashore under precisely similar conditions as to (a) its nature, (b) its musical setting. (MTC/SS/146)

All of these figurative uses are well established and transparent to the users, they have not transferred from the maritime domain, so cannot be said to exploit maritime resonances. They are therefore classified as dormant conventionalised metaphors.

5.6.2.1 WASHED ASHORE

In the BNC, ASHORE remains a maritime expression that does not appear to have undergone any change into more figurative uses in the general discourse; there are, in fact, more figurative uses of the expression in the MTC than there are in the BNC, where there are only three figurative instances, all using the phrase WASHED ASHORE:

- 8 Most of you, I assume, already know what Viz is about. But in the event you washed ashore even more recently than I, you'll be delighted to know that Viz is about farts, tits and gonads (BNC/ABS)

In text (8) WASHED ASHORE is used to mean born or became aware thus exploiting the MCM of LIFE = A VOYAGE, and saved from a sea of ignorance; IGNORANCE = OCEAN and exploits maritime resonances of being lost at sea, perhaps linked to the idea of the magazine, Viz, as a safe haven or shore. This actually an unusually positive use of WASHED ASHORE; in both the MTC (15 occurrences) and the BNC data (38 occurrences), WASHED ASHORE is overwhelmingly negative, usually being descriptive of bodies, shipwrecks or, in the BNC, dead dolphins or dangerous objects:

- 9 BOMB DISPOSAL specialists were yesterday called out to beaches on the south-west coast of Scotland after Second World War phosphorus canisters believed to be from an undersea dump were washed ashore. (BNC/K5D)

This unusual usage in (8) suggests that this is an innovative metaphor, particularly when compared with the two instances in texts 10 and 11, taken from two different murder mystery novels. The MCMs being exploited are LIFE = SEA, LIFE = SHIP and PERSON = SHIP, DEATH = SHIPWRECK. They exploit the negative prosody of the phrase and the resonances of shipwreck, through the use of flotsam, (10) defined by Smyth as 'where shipwrecked goods continue to float and become derelict property' (1867:308), and salvage, lighten, throw overboard in (11)

10 The top drawer contained a bizarre mixture of objects: a stapler, a bottle of ink, assorted keys, a leather bookmark, an empty black plastic container for film - the flotsam washed ashore in an office from any human life (BNC/G1W)

11 All these odd trappings of a salvaged life, he thought.
All these bits and pieces washed ashore.
After Karen left, I lightened my life - threw things overboard.

(BNC/FP7)

Overall there are no specific maritime themes in the books that the extracts come from, which reinforces the status of these metaphors as working at a conceptual rather than purely linguistic level.

In the BNC, ASHORE is generally a purely a technical/literal expression meaning on shore / not at sea and lacks the subtler nuances of meaning found in the MTC. The phrase WASHED ASHORE, however, is used both as an innovative and as an active conventional metaphor.

Table 21: ASHORE: Summary of Metaphoricity

5.6.3 AFLOAT / FLOAT

Because AFLOAT is the adjectival/adverbial form of float, both terms are dealt with in this section. (Idiomatic uses of FLOAT are dealt with in 5.7.5)

5.6.3.1 AFLOAT, adj. and adv.

MTC: N=476; F=52

BNC: N= 241; F=2.4

K=1492

Appendix 2.18

The earliest citations for AFLOAT, in the OED (updated September 2012) come from the Anglo-Saxon Chronicles (AD 959) in Old English. AFLOAT is defined as:

1. a. Floating on the sea or on any stretch of water (or other liquid) of sufficient depth to support a body; not sinking, not aground; at sea, as opposed to being in dock or in a dockyard.

These meanings are extended in figurative use as:

- 5 a. Free of debt or financial obligation; able to pay one's debts or one's way; financially secure, solvent.

Citations: 1538—2009

- b. Established in a career or in society; able to make one's way in the world or cope with life.

Citations: 1810—1999

6. Unfixed, unsettled, adrift; moving without a guide or control.
Citations: 1566—2007

Many of the citations of figurative use in the OED are in the form of extended maritime metaphors as:

1962 G. Holmes Later Middle Ages (1966) ii. xi. 211 It is difficult to know...whether he lent money because there was no other way to keep the ship of state afloat.

Smyth gives only the nautical definition, making no reference to figurative uses.

AFLOAT. Borne up and supported by the water; buoyed clear of the ground; also used for being on board ship (1867:23)

In the MTC, AFLOAT is overwhelmingly used in its literal sense, just 3% of occurrences (14 lines) being figurative (See App 2.18.1: Fig. 91). Of these, four lines are in the field of finance, e.g.:

- 1 Congress withdrew its financial support after five years. Deprived of this aid, Mr Collins was unable to keep the enterprise afloat in competition with the subsidized Cunard fleet. (MTC/ HNF/AB/ALA)
- 2 And so it befell that the seventeenth century had not run its course before New England was hardily afloat on every Atlantic trade route.
(MTC/ HNF/AB/ALA)

Note that in both of these texts from the MTC, maritime resonances are exploited through the context of the piece and thus these can be classified as active conventionalised metaphors.

Five lines come in a semi-fixed, idiomaticised expression, usually with the verb set and carrying strong negative prosody, meaning to start, spread or foment ideas as in 3 and 4 below:

- 3 'The fellows here, among the military, have got an idea that you refused to fight Maguire; and I believe that donkey, Bolton, has been setting the story afloat. I should like to keel-haul him.' (MTC/ HF/WK/MORT)
- 4 Cain could not, of course, raise any objections; it would have been so different from his general practice, that it would have strengthened suspicions already set afloat by Hawkhurst, which Cain was most anxious just then to remove. (MTC/ HF/FM/10)

SET (object) AFLOAT occurs 14 times in the MTC, but only twice the BNC. In addition to Set, the other top collocating lexical verbs include, Keep (MTC x 78; BNC x 99), Remain (MTC x 21; BNC x 4) and Stay (MTC x 8; BNC x 20). These collocations account for 55% of all instances of AFLOAT in the BNC, and would appear, at first glance, to be closely synonymous terms, effectively forming a semi-fixed expression. However, while Keep only appears with AFLOAT in figurative uses, STAY AFLOAT is used literally in seven out of 20 occurrences. Remain, which is the strongest collocating verb in the MTC (x 21) appears only four times with AFLOAT in the BNC. All uses in both corpora are literal, with the exception of one line in the BNC, taken from a parliamentary speech, which is part of an extended maritime metaphor:

- 5 What does parliamentary sovereignty mean? We lost ours a long time ago, but some people are still clinging to it, as they would to a piece of wreckage, in the hope that it will remain afloat. It is nonsense to think in those terms. (BNC/HHW)

The BNC data shows AFLOAT being used 35 times in extended maritime metaphors, particularly in the domains of Politics (x 11), Business/Finance (x 9) and Sport (x 5), with other domains such as Creative Writing accounting for the rest.

Politics:

- 6 ...the tide had sufficiently turned to abandon him gently on the beach, leaving Harold Wilson afloat in waters so shallow that the most gentle paddle hit the sand. (BNC/FPN)

- 7 He said that the army was an 'unpolitical' body, keen to keep the 'ship of state' afloat, and added that 'after seven months of democracy the country is once again in the grip of the horror of uncertainty' (BNC/HLB)

Sports:

- 8 Hereford lived dangerously but by half time were still managing to keep afloat.
United began shipping water after the break, a goal from the Fourth Division's top scorer, Dave Bamber doing the damage.

(BNC/K1G)

Financial:

- 9 It was as if Chapman were a captain trying to keep afloat on a treacherous sea in a small boat that threatened at any moment to spring a leak. (BNC/BOL)

Other:

- 10 Now I knew myself to be bad in a bad world, a vessel of poison afloat in a sea of poison, and I thought that this was all there was to know.

(BNC/G06)

Text 10 is more difficult to classify; the concepts of a vessel of poison (with vessel's double meaning of ship and cup/container and a sea of poison could be regarded as innovations, however, the pattern Sea of is highly conventionalised and thus, this usage too is classified as an active conventionalised metaphor.

AFLOAT is used both literally and figuratively. It is associated with a number of fixed patterns with keep, remain, set and stay. Because of the transparency of the expression, its figurative use frequently exploits maritime resonances in often complex extended maritime metaphors as in Text 6, above. It is therefore found most often as an active conventionalised metaphor that is particularly widely used in the fields of Politics and Commerce, where it expresses MCMs of POLITICS = SEA; THE ECONOMY/COMMERCE = SEA, ENTERPRISE = SHIP; THE STATE = SHIP.

5.6.3.2 FLOAT (V)

The verbal form, FLOAT is much more complex. The majority of figurative uses, particularly in the fields of business, economics and politics are idiomatic and are examined in detail in 5.7.5, however, the maritime resonances of FLOAT may be exploited, even when being used in very specialised contexts:

- 11 In terms of a classical wave picture of light the electrons would all be agitated by the electromagnetic radiation, bobbing up and down like anchored buoys in an ocean swell. Whether they would break loose from their moorings and float away would depend upon the violence of the waves, the intensity of the radiation.
It would not be expected to depend particularly on the frequency, the rate at which the waves rose and fell. (BNC/ EW6)

The extended metaphors here make this use of FLOAT AWAY an active conventionalised metaphor, while the overall metaphor being employed to describe light might be regarded as innovative. However, the expression of light as a 'wave form' is now so well established that it could be argued that it is a dormant metaphor that has been reactivated.

5.6.4 ABOARD

MTC: N=1397; F=160

BNC: N=829; F=10

K=3864

Appendix 2.4

The OED has entries for both a verbal and an adverbial/ prepositional use for this term.

ABOARD (V): The verbal form dates from 1458 and continues in use to the present day, although it is described as 'Now rare'; it is defined as 'To approach, draw near to; to enter, set foot on; to land on; to board.' As in the two OED citations below:

1458 J. Jernyngan in Paston Lett. & Papers (2004) II. 340 Then come they and aborded þe schippe þat I was in; and there I was taken and was presoner.

1937 in G. P. Rawick Amer. Slave (1977) I. 330, I and the African aboarded a little skiff and went cross the East Paspagola (Pascagoula) and West Paspagola Bay.

There are no examples of this usage found in either corpus, so it is not explored further in this work.

ABOARD (Adv. & Prep)⁴⁴: The adverbial and prepositional uses are shown to be clearly maritime in origin with the earliest citations dating from 1398 in Middle English and Middle French à bord = ‘on a ship’ and earlier in bord à bord = (of two ships) with sides touching’ from around 1310. (OED)

The OED gives extensive definitions for ABOARD as an ME (See App.2.4 for full citations), which can be simply glossed as on or in a ship. It then goes on to detail the figurative and non-maritime uses:

2. b. *slang. In or into one's body through drinking or eating. 1821—2007
- c. orig. *U.S. On or on to a train, aircraft, or other vehicle. 1840—1995
- d. On a horse; on horseback. 1863—2000
- e. *Baseball. On base. 1931—2003
- f. *fig. In or into an organization or effort; (also) in or into agreement with a policy or decision. Welcome aboard 1936 -2001.

Note that these non-maritime uses are cited as much later adaptations, with the earliest citation coming from 1821 and the most recent appearing to be the realisation of the MCM, ORGANISATION=SHIP, first cited in 1936, in the expression WELCOME ABOARD, defined by the OED as

- d. *welcome aboard phr. said (in allusion to nautical usage) as a joc. greeting to someone joining a particular group, enterprise, etc.

The MMD and the ODP make no differentiation between maritime and non-maritime uses; ABOARD may refer equally to any form of transport:

On or into (a ship, aircraft, train, or other vehicle) (ODP)

There are only two figurative uses found in the MTC data, both in the sense of drinking in excess as in sense 2b above from the OED.

- 1 somehow I got rather more grog aboard than I could stow, and when I came off, the captain swore at me like a pirate, and after I got sober triced me up to the main rigging for a round dozen. (MTC/HF/MM/WITC)
- 2 Down this part Old Cuff, who was ashore on liberty, and who likewise had his ‘beer aboard,’ contrived to trundle himself, and was picked up as dead in the street below. (MC/HF/NA/YAR)

⁴⁴ In the MTC data there are also eight instances of ABOORD, which is the Irish dialect form, which occur in one text (Hutcheson, 1890). These have been included in the figures for ABOARD.

This is an active conventionalised metaphor based on the MCM of PERSON = SHIP and can be linked to the figurative use of STOW AWAY (5.5.7) which exploits the same MCM, through the salient features of Cargo/ Supplies = Food/ Drink; Ship's Hold = Stomach. Note also in text 1 the resonance of 'stow' in the extended PERSON = SHIP metaphor.

The BNC data shows that the majority of uses of ABOARD are still maritime; in a sample of 200 lines selected randomly by Wordsmith Tools, from the total of 948 concordance lines in the BNC, 70.5% (141) are literal/technical maritime uses, 26% (52) are transfers (see 5.5.3 above) and just 3.5% (7 occurrences) are figurative uses.

5.6.4.1 COME* ABOARD /COME* ON BOARD

MTC: N=234

BNC: N= 37

Appendix 2.4.2

Neither of these expressions are defined in the OED or the ALDs despite their somewhat specialised usages. According to the collocates list ABOARD and ON BOARD are strongly patterned with COME* in both the MTC and in the BNC. In the MTC, COME ABOARD is always used in its literal sense of someone, or something, boarding a ship. It is a formulaic phrase, with an 'official' interpretation, when referring to officers or passengers joining a ship:

- 1 Bolitho replaced his hat. 'Aye, sir. Come aboard to join.'
The lieutenant nodded curtly. 'Follow me. I'll have your gear taken aft.'
(MTC/ MF/AK/1)

In the BNC, COME* ABOARD is also used in this maritime sense in the majority of cases (27/37), but additionally is used with other forms of transport including aircraft, trains and even a combine harvester in one text. These lines are classified as transfers.

Four lines have a metaphorical meaning of joining an institution or group, reflecting the MCM of AN INSTITUTION / GROUP/ IDEOLOGY = SHIP

- 2 Did Ampeg give you a free hand when you joined them, in terms of what you wanted to do, or spend?
'Absolutely!
When I came aboard they didn't have a lead amp line as such; they were famous for their bass amps, obviously, but their lead amp line was just there, no real profile, and the consumer didn't really realise that they had anything other than bass amps. (BNC/C9J)

Generally these figurative uses do not exploit maritime resonances and are not part of extended maritime metaphors, suggesting that they are dormant conventionalised expressions, only the transparency and currency of the source expression stopping them from being classified as idiomaticised expressions.

There is one text however where maritime resonances are exploited:

- 3 The Class A boat had belonged to Gianni Varassi's aborted Italian Challenge 93 syndicate, and has been bought under the colours of Publiespana, a Spanish advertising agency owned by the Italian media mogul, Silvio Berlusconi.
Santana is hoping that one of the agency's clients will come aboard with sponsorship. (BNC/AL3)

Here, the theme of the text is sponsorship of one of the yachts in the 1993-4 Whitbread Round the World Yacht Race. Thus COME ABOARD is a carefully chosen ME that is complemented by another ME, UNDER THE COLOURS OF, as well as the direct reference to the 'Class A boat'. COME ABOARD is being used metaphorically in that 'the agency's clients' are expected to financially support development of the campaign to win the race (MCM, CAMPAIGN = SHIP) and not to, literally, join the crew on board the yacht, thus the metaphoricity of the dormant expression has been re-activated making (3) an active conventionalised metaphor.

5.6.4.2 COME* ON BOARD

MTC: N= 480

BNC: N= 40

COME* ON BOARD highlights even more clearly the formulaic nature of the expression in the MTC, where every instance of the phrase is literal, emphasising the maritime wording, where people never enter a ship or walk onto it, and items do not come into or onto it, but always COME ABOARD or ON BOARD.

- 4 He came on board that afternoon, carefully examined into all the documents, and the witnesses whom I could bring forward, showed me the weak side of my defence, and took the papers on shore with him. Every day he came on board, to collect fresh evidence, and examine into my case. (MTC/ HF/FM/7)
- 5 Shoal Waters lifted and surged forward, seemingly jet propelled for seconds or minutes (who looks at a watch in these circumstances?), but not a drop of water came on board (MTC/ L/CS/SHO)

In the BNC data, there are 40 instances of COME* ON BOARD of which 50% are maritime usages following the same pattern as found in the MTC. The remaining 50% occur in the domains of business and politics, exploiting the MCMs of ORGANISATION = SHIP and INITIATIVES/IDEAS = SHIPS.

- 6 If he is to succeed, Simpson might have to rely heavily on his father, Gordon Simpson, a former finance director of Shell who has come on board as deputy chairman. (BNC/BMB)
- 7 Maybe Dublin was wary of making an offer to Jim Molyneaux, when Ian Paisley could repudiate it?
'If there was an agreement tomorrow, Paisley would come on board.'

(BNC/K2L)

Of these 20 figurative uses, only one exploits any maritime resonances:

- 8 His first port of call after coming on board was to insure RDI's financing which meant going to the company's strategic partner, the Korean firm $380m-a-year TriGem Computer Corp. (BNC/CSC) suggesting that COME ON BOARD is a dormant conventional metaphor, although its transparency, and the currency of the literal use, mean that it can be re-activated as in (8) above, which is therefore an active conventional metaphor. Both COME ON BOARD and COME ABOARD are fixed in form and very little variation is found in either corpus.

5.6.4.3 ALL ABOARD!

MTC: N=7

BNC: N=35

Appendix 2.4.1

The OED (3rd Ed. 2009) provides the definition

'A call warning passengers to board a ship that is about to depart. Also used (chiefly U.S.) with reference to trains, buses, and other vehicles.'

The earliest citation comes from 1704, all three maritime citations in the OED (See App 2.4.1) show the expression being used either for poetic effect or as part of a pastiche. The remaining citations showing its transferred use with other forms of transport.

ALL ABOARD occurs just seven times in the MTC, four instances of which are prepositional phrases:

- 1 He had imagined the ship was running wild, carrying him and all aboard like some uncontrollable juggernaut. (MTC/ MF/AK/2)

There are three instances of the imperative form of the expression 'ALL ABOARD!', all from the same C.S. Forester novel, where it is not being used at sea, but by canal boatmen on an inland waterway, to summon their passengers to board the barge. Other than here, the expression is not used in this imperative form in the MTC.

In the BNC, there are 35 lines containing ALL ABOARD. Of these, half are used by journalists as 'tag lines' for various types of stories, all of which use the imperative form (See App 2.4.1 Fig 22). There is one instance of the phrase 'All aboard the Skylark', made popular in the 1970's by a children's cartoon TV series (Calveley, 1976), but probably much earlier in origin. The lines apply to a variety of fields and move from literal use with boats: 'All aboard Dodo's Delight', to figurative uses such as 'Time travellers fly high, All aboard!', 'All aboard the Freedom bus' and 'All aboard the pirate ship' from an article about share-trading companies, with no apparent maritime connections, but used in an extended maritime metaphor, with particularly interesting resonances in the context of dishonesty in the world of share dealing:

This is manifestly untrue of the good ones, but mediocre young men on the make are proliferating.
As one manager wryly remarked of his firm: 'All aboard the pirate ship!'
(BNC/EUU)

ALL ABOARD has two clear uses: (a) as a literal prepositional phrase, originally maritime, and thus an ME, but which has been extended to be used for all types of transport and thus can be classified as a transfer, and (b), the imperative form, which although clearly related to (a) is not specifically maritime. The concordances suggest that ALL ABOARD (imperative) is used for any type of transport, literal or metaphorical, except real ships, and, in this context is used, either literally, when referring to physical forms of transport, or as a dormant conventionalised metaphor, which can be glossed as meaning 'join a group/party/organisation etc.', when used in more abstract contexts, where it exploits MCMs of COMMERCE = SEA, ORGANISATION = SHIP and PERSONNEL = CREW.

5.6.4.4 WELCOME ABOARD

Defined in the OED as:

d. welcome aboard phr. said (in allusion to nautical usage) as a joc. greeting to someone joining a particular group, enterprise, etc.

Most uses of the ME in the BNC are as transfers and these have been dealt with in 5.5.3.1. However, as discussed in Chapter 2.1.3.2, the salient features of the ME WELCOME ABOARD include (a) acknowledgement of physical arrival on a ship, (b) recognition of a shared journey, (c) acceptance into membership of a particular group and (d) recognition of shared goals. These features are exploited in a number of instances in the BNC e.g.

- 1 Widmark had recently joined John Ford's repertory company and so Wayne, who was producing and directing as well as starring as Davy Crockett, was delighted when Widmark accepted the role of Jim Bowie - so much so that he took an ad in the Hollywood Reporter reading 'Welcome aboard, Dick.' (BNC/CDG)
- 2 New arrival: Welcome aboard son is the message from SDLP former Mayor Mary Bradley to newly-elected son-in-law Martin Bradley.
(BNC/HJ4)
- 3 In the Toviere, the Mark Warner hotel overlooking the finish, Hans Annewanter, their new Austrian team chief, welcomed girlfriends aboard, but strictly as members of the party. (BNC/G2W)

The meaning here is extended to encompass abstract ideas or organisations rather than physical vehicles. The metaphors do not rely on maritime resonances for their interpretation and none of them exploit extended maritime metaphors. The figurative meaning of the ME, in this usage is listed in the ODP and MMD as a secondary sense and thus these are classified as dormant conventionalised metaphors.

5.6.5 ANCHORAGE

MTC: N=369; F=42

BNC: N= 129; F=1.5

K=1210

Appendix 2.37

According to the OED, ANCHORAGE⁴⁵ has been used in its literal senses of:

- '1. The action or process of anchoring; the condition of lying at anchor.
2. Conditions admitting of anchoring; esp. a place for anchoring; anchorage-ground.'

since at least 1611 and has remained in continuous use up to the present day in these maritime contexts. The earliest use appears to be in the sense of 'a toll charge for anchoring; anchorage-dues', dating from 1516, which also remains in current use, as in this example from the Malta harbour regulations:

- 1 'SUBSIDIARY LEGISLATION 499.38
BERTHAGE AND ANCHORAGE DUES REGULATIONS' (justiceservices.gov.mt, 2005)

The OED also gives a definition of its transferred use as:

3. a. transf. A position affording support, a hold.

Citations in the OED, for its figurative use, defined as:

- '4. fig. A point of support or rest for the mind or feelings; something on which to depend or repose.'

appear somewhat later, the earliest coming from the 1860s.

The MMD gives the technical maritime definition: 'a place where ships can anchor' and the transferred usage: 'a place where something can be firmly fixed to something else'.

Smyth's definition is purely technical and maritime.

ANCHORAGE. Ground which is suitable, and neither too deep, shallow, or exposed for ships to ride in safety upon; also the set of anchors belonging to a ship; also a royal duty levied from vessels coming to a port or roadstead for the use of its advantages. It is generally marked on the charts by an anchor, and described according to its attributes of good, snug, open, or exposed.
(1867:38)

In the MTC, uses are exclusively literal, and most usually in the sense of a place to anchor as in sense 2 from the OED, e.g.:

- 2 The harbor has good holding ground, capable of affording anchorage for any number of vessels; but on account of the shallowness of the water, vessels of any great burden are obliged to lay some distance from shore.
(MTC/ L/EW/WAR)

The collocates lists (See App 2.37: Table 42) show that most collocates in the MTC are maritime words such as harbour, bay, ships, anchor, whereas the BNC list shares only two terms with the MTC list, in the top 25 collocates: sheltered and safe. Other uses show the transference of the term into non-maritime fields e.g. points and seats. Analysis of the concordances in the BNC breaks down the domains as follows:

Biological topics	11
Engineering topics	24
Figurative/Abstract	14
Maritime	54

The concordances are split almost exactly 50/50 between literal maritime and transferred non-maritime or figurative uses:

Transfer: Biology

- 3 The absence of root growth and thus of anchorage in the soil soon after the seeds have germinated reduces its expenditure of stored reserves and allows the seedling to be carried by physical agents such as wind or water. (BNC/B7H)

Transfer: Engineering

- 4 From nine months to four years a child can use a seat in the back that faces forwards and which can be secured by rear seat belts or their anchorage points. (BNC/C8B)
- 5 Sufficient surplus should be left at the top to allow an anchorage with stones or paving slabs and, when an irregular-shaped pool is envisaged, then calculations should be based upon a rectangle which encloses the greatest width and greatest length of the excavation. (BNC/GV1)

In the transferred uses, the key meaning remains that of a strong physical fixing point, with the salient features being, permanence, security and fixedness.

In the extended uses, such as 6 and 7 below, the key meaning is no longer a physical point of attachment, but an abstract idea of attachment in the expression of human emotions (6) (MCM: EMOTIONS = SEA) and communication where ideas of time and place are linguistically fixed (7) (MCM: LANGUAGE = SEA(?), WORD = SHIP (carrying meaning)).

Extension: Academic (linguistics).

- 6 Place or space deixis concerns the specification of locations relative to anchorage points in the speech event. (BNC/J2K)

Extension: Emotion

- 7 Because babies grow inside their mother, because she is usually the person to feed and physically care for them, and because she provides the emotional anchorage which makes exploration possible, she has enormous importance (BNC/BNF)

These uses do not exploit maritime resonances but appear to be dormant conventionalised metaphors.

In the political/philosophical domain, extended maritime metaphors are frequently present and maritime resonances are strongly exploited in the expression of the MCMs: POLITICS = SEA; STATE = SHIP; ENTERPRISE = VOYAGE:

- 8 'In political activity', writes Oakeshott, 'men sail a boundless and bottomless sea; there is neither harbour for shelter nor floor for anchorage, neither starting-place nor appointed destination. The enterprise is to keep afloat on an even keel.' (BNC/EAJ)
- 9 The supreme dread of everyone who cares for the good of the nation or race is that men should be adrift for want of anchorage for their convictions...(BNC/EAJ)
- 10 At the end of the thirteen years of Conservative rule, Britain was still an offshore island of the United States, but times were changing. Collaboration with Europe was starting to become a possibility. De Gaulle was not immortal, and so it was only a question of time before further attempts could be made to find a sheltered anchorage off the Western European shore. (BNC /ABA)
- 11 As we dip a toe into this rather choppy sea we appreciate even more that our work is a well-tried and tested educational system operating mainly under the safe anchorage of Adult Education. (BNC/KAE)

Here the salient features of ANCHORAGE are more focussed on security and safety, rather than permanence. The continued generation of extended metaphors suggest that these are active conventionalised uses.

5.6.6 ADRIFT

MTC: N= 257; F=29

BNC: N=216;F=2.25

K=646

Appendix 2.12

The OED, gives ADRIFT as:

- (1) 'In a drifting condition...without being moored, steered, propelled etc.
- (2) Freq. in to set (also cut, turn, etc.) adrift: to leave (a person or thing) to drift without means of propulsion, usually deliberately.'

With citations dating from 1578 to 2009. The specialised nautical use is extended figuratively to mean:

(3) 'away from the usual or expected course or position', or, when applied to people or groups,

- (4) 'lacking purpose or direction; disorientated, confused; lost.'
- (5) 'orig. Naut. Of an object: no longer fixed in position; unfastened, detached; (also) missing.'
- (6) 'Of a serviceman, servicewoman, or merchant sailor: absent without leave; late returning from leave.'

These usages have transferred into non-maritime contexts along with additional meanings such as:

colloq. (orig. and chiefly in Sport) 'Short or wide of a target, estimate, score, etc'.

The ODP defines ADRIFT both in literal, maritime and non-maritime figurative uses, very much in line with the definitions given in the OED, while the MMD also gives

Feeling alone and that your life has no clear purpose
and

Come adrift: to become separated from something

Smyth's definition is purely technical.

'Floating at random; the state of a boat or vessel broken from her moorings, and driven to and fro without control by the winds and waves. Cast loose; cut adrift.' (1867:21)

In the MTC, there are examples of all the literal and figurative maritime uses cited in the OED:

- 1 After two nights adrift in this bitter weather, there was little chance of their being alive. (MTC/MF/NM/3)
- 2 After having undergone a great deal of ridicule, and having been kept some time to make sport for these unfeeling wretches, we were at length cast adrift in the open ocean. (MTC/HF/JLF/SEA)
- 3 He had cut himself adrift from that home many years ago. (HF/JC/7)
- 4 On the mortal night which condemned them both to hell, Matthew Lawe was adrift from reason. (MF/NM/MM1)
- 5 To her already heavy cargo 50 tons of coals, in bags, were added while she lay in the Sound, and these were placed round her funnel. When the ship rolled they broke adrift, and the coals being washed down the scupper holes interfered greatly with the working of the pumps.
(MTC/N/TLL)
- 6 In this particular case a Petty Officer had gone ashore and was adrift for 3 or 4 days before returning to the ship i.e. AWOL. (MTC/WT/D)

In the BNC data, there are 28 literal/maritime uses of ADRIFT and 188 figurative uses, including 62 in the field of sports reportage, 16 in business texts, 11 in political writing and a further 96 in a variety of other non-maritime contexts. The top collocates of ADRIFT in the BNC is CAST (App. 2.12: table12) which occurs 18 times in L1 or L2 positions, of these, 12 are figurative uses and six are literal.

ADRIFT occurs in a number of extended maritime metaphors in the BNC, often in the form of the phrase (CAST) ADRIFT IN / ON A SEA OF X; ON appears in the more structurally varied forms of the expression.

- 1 But Coleridge soon found himself adrift once more on a sea of self-doubt, without employment of any kind, and without money. (BNC/B0R)
- 2 But it is important to realize that these goals are not the manifestation of personal motives cast adrift from organizational moorings, neither are they disembodied acts committed in some metaphysical sense by corporations. (BNC/CHL)
- 3 I am warmed by an exhalation of spices and honey, but the words she speaks, as she flings the earring out to sea, cast me adrift in an ice-cold current. (BNC/HGN)
- 4 The supreme dread of everyone who cares for the good of the nation or race is that men should be adrift for want of anchorage for their convictions. (BNC/EAJ)
- 5 In his attempt to appeal to Basildon Man, Smith has lifted the anchor of ideology and set Labour adrift on a sea of fudge.' (BNC/K5D)

In the MTC there are 19 instances of CAST ADRIFT, of which only one is used in a figurative sense:

- 6 'I always thought you were somewhat heartless, Willems, and apt to cast adrift those that thought most of you.' (MTC/HF/JC/7)

ADRIFT IN occurs 27 times; nine times in the phrase ADRIFT IN A (OPEN) BOAT and three times in the form ADRIFT IN THE X OCEAN and a further seven as ADRIFT IN (WEATHER). Six occurrences are figurative, e.g.

- 7 And then there was Ferraby, adrift in circumstances he scarcely comprehended. (MTC/MF/NM/3)

ADRIFT IN A SEA OF X does not occur at all. These differences in form and usage between the literal applications in the MTC and figurative uses in the BNC, support observations by Cruse (1986), Deignan (2005) and Hanks (2006) that suggest that metaphoricity may be signalled by post-modification of the phrase. Thus ADRIFT IN A SEA OF X is marked as an innovative, or 'dynamic' metaphor:

When the metaphor is dynamic (i.e. when it is coined ad hoc...), we can say that the conventional partitive of, signalling a metaphor, is being exploited dynamically. (Hanks 2006:18)

However, although the overall metaphor a sea of fudge (text 5) may be regarded as innovative, the structure ADRIFT IN/ ON A SEA OF X occurs four times in the BNC and thus is not innovative, but can be classified as an active conventionalised metaphor that exploits maritime resonances and maps onto MCMs of POLITICS = SEA, BUSINESS = SEA, PROJECT = VOYAGE, ORGANISATION = SHIP and others.

After CAST, the next lexical item at the top of the BNC collocates list is POINT*, which features 28 times in 19 texts, in the fields of sports, financial reportage and politics, e.g.:

- 8 The Ballymena and Antrim team, though, pushed them to the limit, finishing just two points adrift. (BNC/K2U)
- 9 This sent a few tremors through the market with the FT-SE Index closing more than 19 points adrift at 2750.7. (BNC/CBD)

To these lines, a further 12 numerical collocates can be added, which are effectively synonymous with POINTS in these contexts:

- 10 Scott Stewart's superlative defence was the springboard for their recovery from 0-12 adrift against Queensland in the semi-final. (BNC/K5J)
- 11 the Hartlepool runner-up, radio and PR man Mr Graham Robb, put up the Conservative vote by a thousand but was still 8,782 adrift. (BNC/K4W)

This use of (POINTS) ADRIFT, used principally in sports, political and financial reportage, never engenders extended metaphors or exploits maritime resonances, it is not only very frequent, but the form is also fixed, this use is therefore classified as an idiomaticised expression.

The range of metaphorical meanings attached to ADRIFT, both within and without the maritime field, and the inventiveness of some of the extended maritime metaphors employed, particularly in the fields of sport and politics, indicate that this is a vibrant and creative expression, where maritime resonances are still strongly exploited, it is thus an active conventionalised metaphor that generates innovative expressions.

5.6.7 AGROUND

MTC: N=186; F=21

BNC: N=63 F= 0.7

K=615

Appendix 2.22

The OED defines AGROUND in its original use, cited from around 1300, as meaning

‘1. On or to the ground; on the earth. Also in figurative contexts. Freq. poet. Now arch.’

And with a specific nautical meaning of:

a. Esp. of a vessel: on or to the bottom in shallow water, so as to be no longer afloat. Freq. in to run aground’

b. fig. and in figurative contexts. In or to a state or condition of difficulty, hardship, confusion, etc.; (also) stranded, abandoned.’

These maritime and figurative uses dating from the 15th and 16th centuries respectively.

Smyth also gives both technical and figurative definitions:

AGROUND. The situation of a ship or other vessel whose bottom touches or rests upon the ground. It also signifies stranded, and is used figuratively for being disabled or hindered. (1867:26)

The ALDs give only the literal/technical maritime definition, with the MMD confining its entry to the phrasal verb forms run/go aground.

The collocates lists (App 2.22, Table 24) show that there is very little difference in the way AGROUND is used in the two corpora. Generally the expression is used in its literal, maritime sense. In the BNC, there are just four figurative uses of the expression (Figure 37, below). In each case the expression is in the form of RUN* + AGROUND:

- 1 SO THE new FADS have, ironically enough, outlasted that most infamous of fads.
While most of the Manc pack ran aground by the time their debut albums hit the bargain bins, these ugly ducklings have started the second lap with their feathers unruffled and their rhythms decidedly unflurried. (BNC/CK5)
- 2 Any attempt to frame a definition along these lines, however, would run aground because, although such a definition could be made fairly general, it would not discriminate sharply enough to provide a guarantee of hyponymy. (BNC/FAC)
- 3 No, more generally than that: the idea of beauty as terrorism.
Of possession as the delusion we all run aground on.

It seems like there's a negativity at the heart of romantic love, because love is nothing if not the always already doomed fantasy of possession.
(BNC/AB3)

- 4 NICK FALDO was scotched on the rocks but toasted a 70 for the halfway lead in the £1.8 million Johnnie Walker World Championship here yesterday.
The World No 1 ran aground at Tryall's treacherous 15th hole but floated a shot ahead of Greg Norman and Tom Kite with a one-over-par 141. And now Faldo is primed to show the rest of the world's top golfers that he is the undisputed champion.
The Open champion's engine room is his ability to keep the ball in play, but Seve Ballesteros's spluttered and died as he took a six-over-par TEN at the 10th hole. (BNC/CBG)

The citations come from widely varied fields, two from music reviews (1 and 3), one from a linguistics textbook (2) and one from a sports report on a golf match (4), which employs an extended maritime metaphor. Tryall Golf Course is a beachside course on Jamaica's Montego Bay, thus giving a maritime context for the metaphor, which is also mixed with a play on Johnny Walker Whisky, in the phrase Scotched on the rocks, which then introduces the maritime theme.

The extended maritime metaphor in 4 marks this as an active conventionalised metaphor. Similarly there are exploited resonances in 1, albeit the vessel is actually a duck rather than a boat. The remaining texts exploit no such resonances and thus the metaphors here are dormant rather than active.

5.6.8 ARMADA

MTC: N=98; F=11

BNC: N=115; F=1

K=219

Appendix 2.40

The OED entry for ARMADA has not been fully revised since the original entry in 1885, which gives: 'armada, n. 1. A fleet of ships of war.' With citations dating from 1533 and also '2. spec. The 'Invincible Armada' sent by Philip II of Spain against England in 1588'. The ODP's entry is simply 'a fleet of warships' and similarly the MMD definition is also purely maritime, 'a large group of warships'.

Smyth gives:

ARMADA. A Spanish term signifying a royal fleet; it comes from the same root as army. The word armado is used by Shakespeare.

With the exception of one line in the MTC, all 98 references are to armadas of ships apart from:

- 1 some time after the German air armada had disappeared to the north-westward, towards London, a German Me 109 with a red-painted propeller boss flew in and methodically fired long bursts into the two RAF parachutes. (MTC/ MF/DP/1) which is a simple transfer as seen with other aviation terms adopted from the maritime lexicon. The same transfer to aviation usage is also found in the BNC:

- 2 The first flight of a giant air armada that will race 145,000 tons of supplies to the devastated country will take off next Monday. (BNC/CH6)

In the BNC, the Spanish Armada of 1588 is revisited in modern news stories:

- 3 BRITAIN HAS been instructed by the European Community to suspend immediately key provisions of the 1988 Merchant Shipping Act, designed to repel a 100 - strong armada of Spanish vessels fishing in United Kingdom waters. (BNC/A4H)

As well as being used in the literal technical sense as defined by the ALDs cited above:

- 4 A formal launch of the permanent exhibition, created by Liverpool's Walton Group, will take place next May to coincide with a magnificent modern armada of more than 40 warships to commemorate the 50th anniversary of the Battle of the Atlantic. (BNC/K97)

Generally the maritime uses of the expression refer to the Spanish Armada of 1588, either directly, in historical accounts:

- 5 Instead, the Armada sailed up channel and the watchers at Rame, including Carew, could view the first engagement of battle early that Sunday morning off Plymouth, with the first galleon exploding. (BNC/B0G) or indirectly through names of places, enterprises and events, deliberately chosen to celebrate the English victory. In these cases it appears that the meaning of the word ARMADA has changed from the original 'army of ships' to something more akin to a symbol of British fortitude and 'victory against the odds', so that these uses are now effectively resonators. In Plymouth, Devon, home port to the hero of the action against the Armada, Sir Francis Drake, there are 15 businesses listed in the local business directory, using ARMADA in their trading names, ranging from engineering works to letting agents and doctor's surgeries. In addition, key streets in the city are Armada Way and Armada St., while one of the two flagship shopping malls in the city is The Armada Shopping Centre (the other mall celebrates the same theme, being the Drake Shopping Centre). Further afield, British Gas adopted the name Armada for their North Sea Oil Project:

- 6 HINTS of differing ambitions are emerging from the clutch of North Sea gasfields currently being developed by a British Gas and a group of others.
British Gas has dubbed the project Armada but one group of partners has named their discoveries after Elizabethan heroes Drake, Hawkins and Howard - hardly the favourites of the original invasion fleet. (BNC/AL2)

There are 27 uses of the expression in names of festivals, streets and business projects in the BNC.

The figurative use of ARMADA is usually marked by the use of the partitive 'of', e.g.:

- 7 Wherever they go they are escorted by a vast armada of local dignitaries, including the Lord Lieutenant, the Mayor or Mayoress, complete with the chains of office, (BNC/A7H)
- 8 He went from the light grey day into the gloom of a kitchen and immediately found his feet colliding with what appeared to be an armada of saucepans placed on every foot of the flagged floor. (BNC/FP1)
- 9 Yet Joseph knew that he was right to have his armaments in place: you could never trust the gypsies or the tinkers - against each other, let alone anyone else: quacks, drunks and rangers would drift from their positions in the line and cause trouble just by bumping into the orderly armada of hill folk who knew how to hold steady but had never been fond of strangers. While the vagrants and beggars shifted around like floating fireships of guilt, capable of their own frustrations. (BNC/FP1)

These are active conventional metaphors; often exploiting maritime resonances or, as in the case of 9 above, very extended maritime metaphors⁴⁶. The fixed form AN ARMADA OF marks these as conventional metaphors. There is one example of ARMADA's use as part of an extended innovative maritime metaphor.

- 10 Hens are galleon-hulled: we take them by storm, plucking the eggs from under their bodies, bony and warm - freebooters against a proud and panicky-wheeling armada. (BNC/ JOR)

5.6.9 ACTION STATIONS

MTC: N=107

BNC: N=15

Appendix: 2.8.1

The OED does not explicitly state that this is a nautical phrase, however, all the citations provided are taken from maritime contexts. The expression is modern, with the earliest citation in the OED coming from 1914. There is no entry for the term in Smyth (1867), although he defines STATION, a well established shipboard expression, as 'the allotted places of the duties of each person on board', which suggests that, ACTION STATIONS is a development of this usage, possibly combined with the much older command, CLEAR FOR ACTION (See 5.7.2).

In the MTC, all the uses of this expression come from texts written in the mid to late 20th century, usually concerning the two World Wars, although it is also used anachronistically by two modern authors: three times by O'Brian (1979) and three times by Woodman (2000), when writing about the naval war against Napoleon.

The BNC data shows that, as with a number of other MEs, the expression has transferred into aviation and other military and emergency service contexts, without any significant change in meaning. Just three of the occurrences in the BNC are maritime, with another five being transferred usages

- 1 An emergency call received, action stations for the Auxiliary Fire Service.
(BNC/B3K)

However, the phrase is also used metaphorically.

- 2 Another, a business woman, often under considerable pressure, managed to come to an arrangement with her voluble but good-humoured mother, that she could terminate any of their telephone conversations speedily if necessary, without giving offence, simply by saying, 'Well, I'm afraid it's all action stations here now, so I'll have to say goodbye'; and it worked remarkably well. (BNC/C8Y)
- 3 Bogie was very cool and returning insults with a smile while Mayo was rising in anger and waiters were circling warily around taking up action stations.
Suddenly Bogie threw a full glass of scotch into the man's face while simultaneously Mayo hit the man on the head with her shoe. (BNC/CDG)
- 4 ACTION STATIONS
ACTION MANOR grabbed the cup glory as LCFA Premier and Intermediate second round ties dominated the Liverpool Sunday League card. (BNC/K97)
- 5 At the same time I just had to find something to eat, for me and the patient.
Also a receptacle for catching rainwater.
Action stations, said headvoice.
Only people with soft heads stick them in the sand and wait to be kicked up the arse by little cheats and liars. (BNC/G02)

In (2) it is a coded message in a domestic telephone conversation; (3) comes from an article about an actor's temper tantrums and (4) is a sports report, using a play on words about a Liverpool football team called 'Action Manor'. (5) is from a somewhat surreal first person narration, recounting thought processes. In addition, there are two lines from promotions in walking and outdoor pursuits magazines, where the phrase is a play on words for promoting 'Action Packs'.

The fact that this is a relatively modern expression may account for the range and dynamism of the uses found in the BNC. A number of these uses might be regarded as innovative, which suggests that this is a productive expression. ACTION STATIONS is still used in the BNC in its original maritime field, as well as transferring into other related fields in aviation and the emergency services. But it has also become purely metaphorical in more abstract emotional uses, as well as in fields such as sport and advertising, where the salient features of physical positioning to cope with a physical emergency or challenge have been mapped onto ideas of mental/emotional positioning to cope with non-physical challenges or opportunities.

The use of the expression in other military/emergency service contexts has resulted in maritime resonances apparently being lost, so that there is no exploitation of the expression, in the form of extended maritime metaphors, in the BNC data. Despite this lack of exploitation, the continued literal use of the ME and the innovative forms of metaphorical usage classify it as an active conventionalised metaphor.

5.6.10 THROW* OVERBOARD

MTC: N=328

BNC=31

K (OVERBOARD) = 3761

Appendix 2.4.8.3

The OED defines THROW OVERBOARD as:

Overboard, adv.

1 a. Of motion: over the side of a ship or boat; out of, off, or from a ship into the water, etc. Also in extended use.

2 Fig. a. to throw (also cast, fling, etc.) overboard : to cast aside, discard, reject, renounce.

The MMD gives only the literal, maritime interpretation, whereas the ODP gives no maritime definition, but says simply, Throw Overboard: Abandon or discard something THROW* + OVERBOARD appears 328 times in the MTC and, in the overwhelming majority of cases, has a strongly negative prosody e.g.

- 1 Many who had hitherto been exerting themselves manfully abandoned all hope; some threw themselves overboard, others rushed below to the spirit-store, hoping to reach it before the fire had gained possession of the hold. (MTC/HF/WK/MORT)

- 2 They mentioned this to the crew of the fishing-smack who replied, 'If they find out he's got money about him, they'll murder him and throw him overboard (MTC/N/IH)
- 3 I was on the forecastle, the captain of which had his head taken clean off by a cannon-ball; the captain of the ship coming forward at the same moment, only said, 'Poor fellow! throw him overboard; there is no time for a coroner's inquest now.' (MTC/HF/FM/1)

There are only three figurative uses:

- 4 You will be at sea without your compass--you have thrown religion overboard--and what is to guide you in the hour of trial?' (MTC/HF/FM/1)
- 5 LARBOARD. The left side of a ship, when the spectator's face is towards the bow. The Italians derive starboard from 'questa borda', 'this side,' and larboard from, 'quella borda', 'that side;' abbreviated into 'sta borda' and 'la borda'. Their resemblance caused so many mistakes that, by order of the admiralty, larboard is now thrown overboard, and 'port' substituted. (MTC/HNF/WS/WOR)
- 6 It was not until 1849 that Great Britain threw overboard her long catalogue of protective navigation laws which had been piling up since the time of Cromwell, and declared for free trade afloat. (MTC/HNF/AB/ALA)

In the BNC, THROW* + OVERBOARD appears 31 times, of which 12 instances are metaphorical. The metaphors occur in the fields of business (x1), human emotion (x2), politics (x7) and sport (x2) e.g.

Business

- 7 Firms that should be investing and preparing are throwing overboard, just to survive, research, design and everything, including model changes and investment, to struggle through a depression that the Government have created (BNC/HHX)

Politics

- 8 Almost all principles and the corner stone of socialism ie: nationalisation, have been thrown overboard in the scramble to be elected. (BNC/K55)

Sport

- 9 And now the FA must decide whether they feel it is in everyone's best interests if they throw Taylor overboard into Boston harbour, just like the Yanks did 200 years ago to another unwanted English export. (BNC/K3H)

Emotion

- 10 All these odd trappings of a salvaged life, he thought.
All these bits and pieces washed ashore.
After Karen left, I lightened my life - threw things overboard.
What did I keep?
Some things of hers; some things of mine. (BNC/FP7)

In all cases, the metaphor expresses abstractions, ideas, principles, policies rather than physical objects, reinforcing the point that metaphors express abstract ideas in concrete terms. Texts 7, 9 and 10 exploit maritime resonances, reflecting the literal action of jettisoning cargo or ballast to lighten ship, while 9 also uses an extended metaphor which makes direct reference to an historical maritime event. None of the remaining eight figurative uses in the BNC exploit maritime resonances.

The exploitation of maritime resonance and the transparency of the expression and the continued exploitation of the salient features of negative prosody, jettisoning unwanted, useless or dangerous items or personnel, and the occasional use of extended maritime metaphors, make THROW OVERBOARD an active conventionalised, metaphor. The ME maps onto MCMs of LIFE = VOYAGE; POLICY/ IDEAS, PRINCIPLES = CARGO; PARTY, ENTERPRISE, ORGANISATION = SHIP

5.6.11 MAN OVERBOARD

MTC: N=33

BNC N=11

Appendix 2.4.8.2

The OED cites uses of the phrase from 1829 through to 1992; defining it as:

'n. a person who has fallen into the sea from a vessel; (so as int.) a call to alert crew members to such a casualty and initiate the recovery procedure; (occas.) the procedure itself'.

While Smyth gives:

'MAN OVERBOARD! A cry which excites greater activity in a ship than any other, from the anxious desire to render assistance.' (1867:467)

The MMD echoes Smyth's definition:

Man overboard (Spoken) used for telling people that someone has fallen into the water.

The MTC has 33 occurrences of the phrase and all the instances are literal.

Its form varies; In modern texts it may be a component of a fixed noun phrase e.g.

- 1 I can still remember the full contents of the brief message 'Anyone reporting anything of the alleged man overboard incident to any persons ashore will be Court Martialled immediately'. (MTC/WT/ST/M) and 50% of the occurrences include the indefinite article:

- 2 I immediately called all hands, crying, 'A man overboard.' The captain hastened on deck with all the others, and ordered the helm a-lee.
(MTC/HF/FM/11)

This form is used in the older texts, such as Marryat (1846), cite above, and Leech (1843).

In more modern texts, the indefinite article is dropped.

Another variant is its adjectival use in noun phrases describing life-saving equipment on modern boats, as in 3, below, from a WebText (Jones,2000)

- 3 It turned out that the horseshoe man-overboard buoy had been washed from its mounting and was trailing behind us by its attached whistle on a line!
The Lifesling, another man-overboard contraption, fell to bits more quietly.
(MTC/WT/51)

In the BNC, the ME only occurs 11 times. None of which include the indefinite article as found in the MTC data. Three are literal maritime uses and another four use the expression as an adjectival phrase in technical descriptions of lifesaving equipment or procedures, e.g.:

- 3 Both have a full 3 year warranty and can be mounted externally for ease of use and feature a one-touch man overboard key. Decca-ap5 is available in three versions (BNC/CFT)

There is one figurative use of the term, in an article from The Economist magazine about particle physics research:

- 4 Particle physics
Man overboard
 THE physics of tiny particles tends to attract the big: big machines, big budgets and big personalities.
 One of the biggest names in the field, though, will not be there.
 The SSC's director, Roy Schwitters, has decided that he can do without the participation of Samuel Ting, from the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. (BNC/ABG)

Which maps onto MCMs of RESEARCH = SEA, PROJECT = VOYAGE, ORGANISATION = SHIP, where the research project team = ship's crew and the rejected researcher = man overboard. There is no exploitation here of maritime resonances, although MAN OVERBOARD is current and remains a transparent ME, this instance therefore is classified as a dormant conventionalised metaphor.

There are also two instances in the context of quizzes or children's games centred on the theme of pirates:

- 5 Other commands are 'Climb the rigging'- pretend to climb rope; 'Man overboard'- pretend to pull the rope up; 'Scrub the decks'- pretend to scrub the floor and 'Captain's dog'- pretend to pat a dog.(BNC/C8P)
- 6 Answers: parrot, black spot, walk the plank, jolly roger, long john silver, eye patch, cutlass, treasure, man overboard, land ahoy. (BNC/C8P)

Both instances come from a single text and are being used within a fictional maritime context, they are treated, therefore, as literal uses within a fictional setting.

5.6.12 ALL AT SEA

MTC: N =2

BNC: N = 21

Appendix 2.26.1.1

The OED cites metaphorical uses of AT SEA and ALL AT SEA, meaning confused, from the mid-eighteenth century. This sense is thus very well established. Hanks (2006:23ff) produces a detailed case study of the word SEA to explore ideas of metaphoricity and, in particular, he discusses the expression ALL AT SEA, which he regards as an idiom rather than a metaphor:

‘because its meaning is fixed and does not depend on resonance between primary and secondary subjects’ (ibid: 26)

Note that the figurative ALL AT SEA does not appear in the list of MEs identified in 4.3.2.1, because it occurs only once (text 1, below) in the MTC, along with just one other related metaphorical expression, COMPLETELY AT SEA (2). There is also one literal use (3).

- 1 Cape St. Roque, Brazil-- All at sea regarding the Spanish-American war
(MTC/ HNF/JS/ALO)

- 2 Dan, now completely at sea, simply regarded her in silence.
(MTC/HF/LP/DAN)

- 3 On a more factual note; it is the concern for all at sea to be safety conscious, aware of trips and hazards and to share the responsibility equally for transforming the workplace into a safe environment.
(MTC/WT/MA/ID)

AT SEA occurs 1267 times in the MTC and 770 times in the BNC. Hanks notes that AT SEA is a conventionalised phrase, that is, there are, theoretically, numerous possible ways to describe sailing on an ocean, but AT SEA has become the accepted fixed form, making it, in the terms of this study, an ME. In the BNC, while the overwhelming majority of instances of AT SEA are literal, there are 44 figurative uses of the phrase. ALL AT SEA occurs 33 times, of which 23 instances are figurative, e.g.:

- 4 Being Hereford's keeper though, is rather like being King Canute.
The next Lincoln attack swept United away.
They were all at sea as Neil Matthews took aim and fired in number 2.
(BNC/K1F)

13 instances refer to a racehorse of that name that features in a number of press reports in the corpus; for clarity, these have been omitted from the data, with the exception of a single use of the name (text 4, below) which might be claimed to be metaphorical because there is extended exploitation of the metaphorical potential of the name in in the caption and first line of a racing report:

- 4 Splash out on the sea
ALL AT SEA has the name and the conditions to cause a big splash at Ascot today. (BNC/CH3)

In addition to the canonical form ALL AT SEA, which provides the majority of citations, there are also a number of variants of the expression where various modifiers mark the figurative use of the expression:

- 5 For all her aristocratic breeding, this innocent young kindergarten teacher felt totally at sea in the deferential hierarchy of Buckingham Palace.
 (BNC/ECM)
- 6 Efficiency about the house on the part of others always inspired wistful envy in Meredith who was efficient about the office and rather at sea about the home. (BNC/ECM)
- 7 All of which gives one seriously to think that there must be many another way in which hearing folk are completely at sea in their ideas about what is right and proper for the deaf. (BNC/FTX)

Texts 5-7 (above) demonstrate that in the BNC the metaphorical forms tend to be clearly marked by a range of qualifying adverbs of degrees of completeness⁴⁷: A BIT/ ALL/ COMPLETELY/ QUITE/ RATHER/ SOMEWHAT/ TOTALLY/ UTTERLY. These qualifiers are strong markers of metaphoricity and all the occurrences of AT SEA that are modified in this way are figurative uses. In this respect, the structure is very similar to that of 'TAKEN ABACK', which is marked by the use of the same set of adverbial qualifiers (See 0). But note that other instances may be unmarked, and the figurative meaning has to be elicited from the overall context. Line 27 is of particular interest here, in that it illustrates well the use of secondary resonances to reinforce the maritime metaphor:

- 8 The tour may have lost an offshore event but financially it is far from being at sea.
Prize money will rise by a further 18 per cent during the forthcoming year.
 (BNC/AAN)

Here, the context is a golf tournament and the metaphor is initialised by the resonance with 'offshore', but also with 'prize money' in the following sentence, which has a literal meaning in the context of the competition, but also carries very strong maritime resonances through ⁴⁷ However, note that an apparently related expression, FAIRLY AT SEA, does not fit this pattern, but, illustrates well Sinclair's model of terminological language, in that it is a highly specialised ME, which appears in the MTC but not in the BNC, with a literal sense of when the voyage is properly underway or well away from the land e.g.

Captain Williams was a thoughtful man, and was anxious to get the ship fairly at sea, with the first work done, previously to the next Sabbath.
 (MTC/HF/JFC/1)

reference to the prize money system operated by the Royal Navy during the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries.

Money realized by the sale of a captured ship or its cargo, and distributed among the captors (OED)

Of 44 metaphorical uses of the phrase AT SEA, 20 deliberately exploit maritime resonances in extended maritime metaphors connected either with location or subject matter, often for comic effect, often playing on the reader's 'inside' knowledge of the topics being discussed for the joke to be realised, as in 9:

9 All at sea in a spin!

Although in 'Coarse Fisherman' I primarily write about coarse fish to be caught on lures - pike, zander, perch etc. - I do occasionally refer to game fish and in this feature I want to mention sea angling. (BNC/HJE) where there is a double play on words, using ALL AT SEA and a non-maritime idiom, IN A SPIN, with a similar meaning of confusion or lack of control, to refer to a particular form of game fishing that uses a 'spinning lure' to attract fish. Similarly, 10, below, relies on the inside knowledge of sailing aficionados to pick up the reference to a specific model of sailing boat and a particular ocean sailing venue. Here the title of a video is ALL AT SEA, which is used to identify with the likely emotions of novice sailors:

10 'All at Sea', filmed on our Moody 31s in the Ionian, demonstrates for novices all the skills needed to skipper a small yacht in easy conditions. (BNC/G2B)

Text 11 uses a pun on 'awe inspiring' to reinforce the maritime nature of the text

11 Ellerman & Bucknall ladies are simply oar inspiring

AN OAR inspiring performance from a team of Ellerman & Bucknall rowers left the competition all at sea in South Africa recently. At a regatta in Port Elizabeth harbour, local companies associated with ships and shipping were invited to enter teams of six rowers and coxswain in both men's and women's races. (BNC/J1Y)

Although ALL AT SEA glosses as confused or unable to cope and generally has considerable negative prosody, in text 12 the meaning is apparently more literal; there is no suggestion of confusion or disaster and this is the lead into a very positive report on Britain's powerboat racing teams;

12 Still to come on Central News.

All at sea...

We go offshore power-boat racing with the best in Britain. (BNC/K1W) suggesting that the phrase is being used as a resonator to flag up a maritime story, rather than as a metaphor, in this instance.

ALL AT SEA is unusual in that, while AT SEA is a conventionalised ME, ALL AT SEA is not an ME, that is, it does not appear to originate from maritime usage as a specific technical term.

Hanks uses this ME to illustrate the subtle differentiation between metaphor and idiom. He regards ALL AT SEA as an idiom on the basis of its fixed form and 'non-compositional' meaning; the maritime resonances, he claims, are 'historical' (2006:27) and therefore of no relevance to the ME's current meaning. However, the BNC evidence would suggest that, despite their 'historical' nature, the maritime resonances of the expression are, presumably because of the expression's transparency, still very much alive and ripe for exploitation. Every occurrence of ALL AT SEA in the BNC exploits maritime resonances in the co-text. I have therefore classified ALL AT SEA as a dormant conventionalised metaphor that is frequently re-activated for stylistic or humorous effect.

5.6.13 BOATS AWAY

MTC: N=69

BNC: N=11

Appendix 2.51.1

In the MTC, when boats are launched from ships they are described as AWAY. Thus, there are 69 concordances in the MTC where BOATS occurs within three words either side of the node. In addition, boats were often among the first things to be jettisoned when a ship was in danger, when they would be CUT AWAY. The actual expression, BOATS AWAY! occurs only twice (Texts 1 and 2 below). There are, however a number of variations on the theme.

- 1 'Boats away!' roared Harrison. 'Cutter's crew, launch's crew.'
(MTC/ MF/CSF/1)
- 2 'Boats away, sir!' Blackwall was already lowering her two boats near where the other warship had gone down (MTC/ MF/DR/1)
- 3 So he cleared for action and ordered two boats away to attend to the matter. (MTC/ HNF/AB/ALA)
- 4 A call shrilled and a voice yelled, 'Away boats' crews! Lively there!' (MTC/ MF/AK/1)
- 5 'Now clear away them boats, my boys, and after him we'll travel; But if you get too near his flukes he'll flip you to the devil.'
(MTC/ SS/011)

In the BNC, AWAY collocates with BOATS 11 times; of these, however, just one line conforms to the adverbial pattern of the ME as seen above, but is a figurative, ironic use of the expression:

- 7 It is a message from the commodore's lady, which we can all clearly hear five yards away.
She is indicating that tiffin has been ready for some time and that if he doesn't fancy it, the dog does.
'Boats away,' he cries, emptying his glass and making for the door.
(BNC/CFC)

There is too little data here to reach any safe conclusion about the term's general use, however, in this particular case, it can be glossed as 'expressing the need to leave or escape from a situation urgently', thus the ME is a conventionalised dormant metaphor.

5.6.14 FULL STEAM AHEAD

MTC: N=0

BNC: N=22

Appendix 2.23

The OED does not cite this precise expression, although variants of it are given:

7 d. In phrases descriptive of the working of a steam-engine, esp. of a locomotive; often used fig.; e.g. (at) full (half, etc.) steam; with full or all one's steam on; to have (all, much, etc.) steam on; to get up steam, put on steam; to blow off steam, shut off steam, turn off steam; under steam, with steam up, in steam, with the engine working or ready to start working; under one's own steam; like steam (Austral.), furiously; to let off steam: freq. fig., to relieve one's pent-up energy by vigorous activity; to give vent to one's feelings, esp. harmlessly; to run out of steam (First edition, 1916)

These definitions are generally related more to steam locomotives than ships. However, a number of the supporting citations are maritime. The fact that the expression is so closely related to the engine room orders discussed in 5.7.4, suggests that FULL STEAM AHEAD is based on maritime, rather than steam locomotive or other land-based usages, making this an ME, despite the fact that it does not occur at all in the MTC, although the expression STEAMING FULL AHEAD appears twice, both lines coming from Monsarrat's The Cruel Sea (2009):

- 1 Now they all watched with fresh attention, wondering how good the asdic contact was, knowing with professional insight just how difficult it must be for Pergola to get her depth-charges cleared away and ready for dropping, while steaming full ahead in this immensely troubled sea.
(MTC/MF/NM/3)
- 2 She was rolling and pitching drunkenly, and her increased speed sent the spray in great clouds over her bridge. Steaming full ahead, thought Ericson appraisingly: she must be going to drop some for luck.
(MTC/MF/NM/3)

In the BNC, FULL STEAM AHEAD appears 22 times; eight of the uses occurring as predicative complements preceded by IT'S, e.g.:

- 3 It's full steam ahead as investors get appetite for perks a plate.
(BNC/A8H)
- 4 So the 'house of hype' has convinced itself that it's full steam ahead with the architecture centre and hand the cost (RIBA Journal September) conservatively £40,000,000 (count those noughts) over 30 years.
(BNC/APX)

The absence of maritime resonances in texts 3 and 4 suggests these are idiomatic uses; the 'it's' emphasising the fixed nature of the term as a single unit of meaning.

All but one of the lines in the BNC are figurative, generally being used in business and political domains. FULL STEAM AHEAD is used to mean proceed with a project without hesitation or hindrance, exploiting MCMs of PROJECT/ENTERPRISE = SHIP and PROGRESS = VOYAGE. However, in a number of instances, maritime resonances are deliberately exploited, suggesting that the ME has not become fully idiomaticised:

- 5 Despite the demise of cast member FRANKIE HOWERD, Carry On Columbus is set to go full steam ahead (BNC/CHA)

In text 5, the ME is being used in the sense of 'making good progress', as the film project continues despite the death of a key cast member. Similarly, in text 6, the ME indicates financial progress by the shipping company P&O; the maritime resonance of the expression is exploited in an extended maritime metaphor based on the nature of the company's business.

- 6 It's full steam ahead at P&O
THE continental Europe recession failed to prevent property and shipping group P&O steaming full ahead in the first six months of the year, pushing interim profits up to £291.6m from £151.2m last time. (BNC/K2T)

Text 7 refers to the Chinese Dragon Boats raced in Hong Kong, which are propelled by oars not engines and text 8 concerns a cross channel swimmer:

- 7 And breathing fire: Full steam ahead with the Dragon Boats. (BNC/K15)
- 8 He wants to swim the channel because it's always been his dream.
So it's full steam ahead to France, to Cap Gris Nez.
The forecast is good, light winds and calm waters. (BNC/K1Y)

In text 9, the salient feature of the metaphor is the element of steam and there is no maritime resonance; the lines come from an advertisement for a steam cleaner

- 9 Full steam ahead in the Kitchen
Full steam ahead in the Bathroom (BNC/CFT)

While in text 10 the subject is a steam locomotive's first outing, where it might be argued the expression is being used literally.

- 10 Full steam ahead:
Crowds of rail enthusiasts are expected to flock to the Settle-Carlisle line today for the first public run along BR tracks of the steam locomotive Blue Peter. (BNC/K4W)

In each of these extracts (texts 5-10), the expression is used to exploit perceived resonances with maritime or steam themes, for journalistic effect rather than for semantic content, but there is still, in each of these uses, a sense of speedy forward progression of an event or process. Thus the expression remains a conventionalised metaphor, albeit one that may be in the process of idiomatisation. In addition to this adverbial form there is also a related phrasal verb form, TO STEAM AHEAD that now appears to be wholly idiomatic in its use. This is discussed in the next section (see 5.7.2.2 below)

5.6.15 FULL SPEED AHEAD

MTC: N=6

BNC: N=9

Appendix 2.23

Very similar to FULL STEAM AHEAD, discussed above. In the MTC, this phrase occurs six times; it is always used literally as a formalised command:

- 1 'Full speed ahead!' he called out to the officer on the bridge, as soon as he had heard me out, directing also the blue-jacket who had received me at the entry port to pass the word down that he wanted to speak to the gunner. (MTC/ HF/JCH/AFL)
- 2 Then he signalled for full speed ahead. There was a creaking, a sound of roiling water, and then, still blazing with light, the steamship made out for the open sea. (MTC/ HF/LP/DAN)

There are also 26 instances of the expression FULL AHEAD, again as a formulaic engine room command or engine setting. All these expressions come from post nineteenth century texts, such a command being meaningless when applied to sailing ships.

In the BNC, FULL SPEED AHEAD is used twice in a literal, maritime context, the remaining seven uses are figurative. The phrase is used in reportage, political and business texts, often in extended maritime metaphors, exploiting MCMs based on ENTERPRISE = SHIP, STATE = SHIP, COMMERCE = SEA, POLITICS = SEA:

- 3 Ian Gilmour sourly summed up the changes by saying they were 'not much good if you are steering full-speed ahead for the rocks'. He left unexplained why, if that was his view, he had not gone under his own steam somewhat earlier (BNC/ABU).

The expression is usually used as a dormant conventionalised metaphor, but resonances with the maritime image of a large (battle) ship as an unstoppable force, carrying forward momentum, may be exploited, particularly with regard to political and financial enterprises.

5.7 Idiomatified Expressions

Idiomatified expressions are defined here as expressions that were originally literal/technical MEs at some stage in the past, but that are now only used figuratively in the modern discourse without reference to, or awareness of, their origins by most users. Hanks describes such expressions as having become idiomatified:

because [the] meaning is fixed and does not depend on resonance between primary and secondary subjects (2006:27).

Thus, particularly when the source expression is defunct and only the metaphorical meaning remains in use, so that it is now the primary sense, the ME should be regarded as an idiomatic expression. Such MEs are likely to be fixed in form and are often opaque, that is, the meaning may not be recoverable from the lexical form. They are very unlikely to be used in extended maritime metaphors unless they are transparent, and will generally be defined in ALDs only in terms of their figurative meaning as if denotatively⁴⁸.

5.7.1 ALONGSIDE

MTC: N=1345; F= 154

BNC: N=2692; F=32

K=1781

Appendix 2.29

The OED shows ALONGSIDE to be in current use as a nautical expression, defining it as:

Naut. Close to the side of another vessel; side by side with another vessel.
Later also: secured to a quay, wharf, etc. Freq. with of.

with citations from 1704 to 2001, and, as a preposition:

orig. Naut. In a position parallel to; side by side with; close to the side of; next to, beside'.

It also records that the expression has been extended into figurative use since at least 1740:

'fig. and in extended use. a. With of. Together with; at the same time as; in parallel with.

Smyth simply gives:

'Alongside, by the side of a ship; side by side.' (1867:33).

The ALDs make no reference to the word's maritime usage, although the ODP uses a maritime example to illustrate adverbial use:

preposition
(also alongside of)
• close to the side of; next to:
[as adverb] : the boat came alongside

⁴⁸ See 3.2 for a fuller explanation of the concept of idiomaticity and dead and inactive metaphors.

- together and in cooperation with
- at the same time as or in coexistence with

In the MTC, the use of the expression is almost entirely literal and technical, as illustrated by the collocates list (see App 2.29: Table 32), which, apart from function words and a character's name, is made up entirely of technical maritime words and action verbs *come, *lie, *sheer and *haul (up), which generally occur as phrasal verbs with ALONGSIDE as the adverbial particle, e.g.

- 1 , and very angry at the boat not coming alongside properly. 'I thou
- 2 oing to be a pounding match once we get alongside.' 'Pound her well
- 3 brought on shore. The brig then hailed up alongside the quay, and
- 4 se men to know how a boat should be laid alongside a ship of war-gi

In the BNC data, the top lexical collocates (App.2.29: Table 33) are *work, road, and moored. The BNC data shows that in the general discourse, apart from the simple transfer of the term from maritime to other physical contexts, e.g.

- 1 Three times world champion Ayrton Senna will be driving for the Williams team next season...that's official...and alongside him on the grid will be Damon Hill. (BNC/K22)

The expression is used with various degrees of abstraction:

- 2 Thus the curriculum of the primary school, he suggested, should be seen as a beginning, where children are helped to develop an understanding of Mathematics, Science, History and the Arts alongside the mastery of the basics of their mother tongue. (BNC/CLY)
- 3 Some ethnic minorities emphasize the duty of procreation and in-marriage to preserve their society from assimilation, alongside a generally rigid control over behaviour. (BNC/EDK)

However, there is no sign of any exploitation of maritime resonances, even when structural features of the maritime usage are retained in MWEs, such as the maritime usage of COME ALONGSIDE, as in 4 compared with the non-maritime usage in 5, below.

- 4 They hauled up their Norwegian colours, forbidden by the Germans whose only presence was an armed trawler, pulling away from a jetty and prepared to fight.
She was quickly set on fire by the destroyer HMS Somali and the LCAs came alongside the quay. (BNC/CCS)
- 5 The demand, which followed a similar plea from Granada chief Gerry Robinson last week, came alongside news that Carlton had boosted profits by 15% to £102.3m in the year to end September. (BNC/CBD)

This suggests that the expression is now fully idiomatified, and that users do not, despite its continuing maritime currency, make any association with the expression's original meaning or differentiate between the physical sense of alongside and the more metaphorical, abstract senses of the word.

5.7.2 AHEAD

MTC: N=1366; F=156.3

BNC: N=7405; F=86.7

K=349

Appendix 2.23

The OED gives AHEAD as:

adv., prep. and adj. 'In early use chiefly in Naut. contexts, with reference to a ship's head'.

The earliest citation of this nautical use of head is from 1485. The use of AHEAD is given in various maritime contexts with citations dating from the early 16th century, with the general meaning 'In a position to the front (of a person or thing); at some point in one's direct line of motion or vision. In early use freq. in right ahead.' As an adjective, the OED gives

'orig. and chiefly Naut. Designating movement forward or onward; of, relating to, or facilitating such movement, esp. of a vessel.'

This appears to be a later adoption, with the earliest citations coming from 1864.

None of the ALD entries make reference to any maritime meanings, although the ODP gives the origin as mid 16th century (originally in nautical use)

Smyth's definition is purely technical:

'A term especially referable to any object farther onward, or immediately before the ship, or in the course steered, and therefore opposed to astern, - Ahead of the reckoning, is sailing beyond the estimated position of the ship. Ahead is also used for progress; as cannot get ahead, and is generally applied to forward, in advance. (1867:27)

Smyth uses the word AHEAD 49 times in various technical descriptions. Two forms occur in the MTC: AHEAD and A-HEAD. The hyphenated form only appears in the earliest texts in the corpus (1748 -1838), (See App 2.23: Fig.128) and seems to support the earliest use of the term, deriving from the use of the word head to refer to the front of the ship;

'Head, n

21.a The fore part of the ship, boat, etc.; the bows.' OED (1st Ed. 1889):

In the MTC, the expression is generally used in its technical/literal sense, frequently juxtaposed with ASTERN (44 occurrences in 21 texts), in much the same way as with FORE and AFT, discussed in 5.5.1.1.

- 1 Lieutenant Richard White had the morning watch aboard Victory. Flying the flag of Earl St Vincent the great three decker stood north west under easy sail, the rest of the blockading squadron in line ahead and astern of her. (MTC/ MF/RW/DRI)

In the BNC this juxtaposition occurs just eight times, in either aviation (x5), where it appears in highly technical radio navigation training texts,

- 2 Track is intercepted when RC has moved to a point where it is displaced from 0° (station ahead) or 180° (station astern) the same number of degrees as the interception angle.

ADF - TRACK INTERCEPTION BEACON AHEAD OR ASTERN

(BNC/G3K)

or in Maritime (x3) contexts.

- 3 Each gentle breath was exquisitely hushed in these still hours as the light began to glimmer over the arch of heaven, 'mid the cloud-wreaths, over the mountains, and on the wide expanse of ocean - ahead, astern, and on either side of us, as we sped towards Lewis. (BNC/B1N)

As well as the literal/positional use of the term to describe objects or physical movement, there are a number of formulaic fixed phrases in the MTC, such as FULL AHEAD (TOGETHER) (x36), FULL SPEED AHEAD (x5), SLOW AHEAD (TOGETHER) (x37) usually in the form of engine room orders:

- 4 The Valley City, and I believe all naval vessels, were directed to go ahead, fast, slow, or stop, or back fast or slow, by a bell hung in the engine room connected with the pilot-house by a wire which was pulled by the pilot. One bell was to start; two bells, go ahead slow; four bells, go ahead fast; and one bell to stop (that is when the vessel was in motion); three bells back; two bells, back slow; and four bells, back fast. (MTC/ L/JB/REM)

Or occasionally as part of radio protocols:

- 5 'Yacht Mike-Kilo-Kilo-Zulu-Six, this is the bulk freighter Star Conveyor, my position is 16° 57' North, 36° 49' West. Ummm, go ahead, over.'

(MTC/WT/51)

5.7.2.1 GO AHEAD

In the MTC, GO AHEAD occurs 41 times, in both literal (x22) and figurative (x19) uses. There are two predominant literal uses; the first in the sense of physically moving a vessel (or its engines) forwards, is often part of a formulaic order to the ship's engine room⁴⁹. The second use is in the sense of going physically in advance of other ships as in:

- 6 'Come, Mr Biggs, I expected you off in the first boat,' cried Mr Sawbridge; 'be as smart as you please, for the yards are not yet squared.' 'Shall I go ahead in this boat, and square them, sir?' 'That boat, no; let her drop astern, jump up here and lower down the dinghy. (MTC/ HF/FM/4).

⁴⁹ Note that 'going ahead' in maritime terms does not necessarily mean going forwards in a straight line, but merely that the engines are driving the ship forwards as opposed to astern, e.g. 'The engines of the gunboat were going ahead with the helm a-port'.

The figurative uses all extend the concept of physical movement/position into a more abstract concept of continuing an action or proceeding with a plan. In the MTC, there are six instances of its use in the imperative, where it is used as a direct challenge or defiance:

- 7 if you want to be a bastard, go ahead and see how it works...
(MTC/ MF/NM/3)

all of these coming from modern authors, the earliest being Conrad (1904) Nostromo.

There is one instance of the adjectival form from a modern sailor's journal (MacFadyen, 2011):

- 8 That was another of the anachronisms of American shipping. I don't suppose there has been a beam engine in Britain since the very early twentieth century years - yet here, in go-ahead, up-to-date America they were still considered good enough. (MTC/L/DM/MAC)

GO is the most significant verbal collocates of AHEAD in the BNC, it is third in the list (App 2.23: Table 25) and appears in L1 position 1,451 times. GO AHEAD takes four basic grammatical forms:

A) Adjectival:

- 9 Montenegro's young and go-ahead leadership, which came to power this year amid furious popular dissatisfaction with the 'old men in grey suits', sponsored the gathering of Nicholas's surviving relatives - the first 'royal reunion' organised by a Communist government. (BNC/A1G)

B) Imperative

- 10 However there are, of course, some very good coroners who say to the inspector at the outset, 'You go ahead and do your job of investigating the cause of the accident and I will carry out my formal inquiry into the cause of death (BNC/CN2)

C) Noun Phrase

- 11 With punters across the country totally baffled, the field regrouped and, after being given the go-ahead by course officials after an eight minute break, started again, this time jumping the offending obstacle. (BNC/CBG)

D) Verb Phrase

- 12 The MPs had become increasingly sceptical of British Rail's demand that the bill go ahead before BR and Eurorail, the private-sector consortium, decide on the last section of the tunnel route. (BNC/A7W)

In the BNC, the verbal forms, including the imperative, are almost invariably used in the sense of 'proceed' or 'carry on' rather than 'precede' or 'go in advance of' as found in nearly half the literal instances in the MTC.

In the BNC, the noun phrase THE GO(-)AHEAD occurs 254 times and in all but 21 instances, collocates with the lemmas GIVE, as in 11, above, or GET, e.g.

- 13 Cheating wife gets go-ahead for baby claim (BNC/CBF) which echoes the idea of 'giving' an order and ties in with the formulaic use of AHEAD found in the MTC. The phrase is usually hyphenated in the BNC, both in the nominal and adjectival forms, suggesting that these expressions have become fully lexicalised. There is no evidence of maritime resonances being exploited and the link with the original naval command GO AHEAD has been lost, making this a purely idiomatic phrase in modern usage.

5.7.2.2 TO STEAM AHEAD.

This phrasal verb is closely related to the metaphorised adverbial expression FULL STEAM AHEAD (see 5.6.14 above). The OED (1st Ed. 1916) gives only:

Steam, v.

7. To move or travel by the agency of steam:

a. of a ship or its passengers. Also to steam it. Also with advs., as away.

b. of a railway-engine, the train or its passengers.

It then cites a number of figurative uses of the expression steam away* but cites no instances of STEAM* AHEAD. The MMD cites a single example of STEAM (v, Intransitive) as:

if a person steams somewhere, they move quickly in a particular direction and provides a citation using STEAM AHEAD.

In the MTC, STEAM* AHEAD occurs ten times; all the instances are technical descriptions of a ship's progress and usually post modified adverbially, suggesting that in this usage it is not a phrasal verb, but rather, a simple verb + adverb construction:

1 By this time the corvette Oneida had made out the state of the case. Steaming rapidly ahead, she overhauled the Confederate vessels; which, finding they could not escape, ran ashore, the Jackson on the west bank, the Moore on the east, and in those positions they were surrendered.

(MTC/ HNF/AM/FAR)

2 Still, as the wind had somewhat veered round, the engines were kept steaming easy ahead, and it is believed that at this moment no person on board felt anxiety for the ultimate safety of the ship. (MTC/ N/LT/15)

In the BNC, the expression occurs seven times and is never adverbially post modified. There is one example (text 3) of its use in a maritime context, although it is used metaphorically about an Admiral's career rather than the ships he is commanding:

3 Steaming ahead

The seven-strong squadron of Nato warships enforcing the arms embargo off the coast of former Yugoslavia is to be commanded by Britain's Commodore Alastair Ross from tomorrow. (BNC/K2W)

Texts 4 and 5 are in the business/ financial domains; text 4 coming from a report on the global IT and software industry and text 5 from a financial report for Rentokil. There are no maritime or steam resonances evident in these reports:

- 4 One obvious conclusion that could be drawn from the review is that the Japanese are steaming ahead with well defined information technology plans. (BNC/EDT)
- 5 So let's take a look at the four divisions.
Medical Services are steaming ahead having had a great year.
(BNC/HBJ)

However, resonances with steam power are exploited occasionally as in:

- 6 BR steams ahead into the new age
THE Chancellor promised a new era for British Rail last night just as this steam train became the last to run into London.
It was ironic that Mr Lamont gave details of aid to BR at the same time as the old-world Princess Margaret Rose was steaming across the countryside to London's Marylebone station to raise £2 million for the museum-like Great Central Railway. (BNC/CEK)

The use of the expression in the business domain (4 out of 7 instances) appears to be entirely idiomatic, whereas, in the domain of reportage, steam and maritime resonances are still exploited, perhaps not surprisingly given the transparent nature of the expression.

5.7.3 ABACK (Adv.)

MTC: N=137; F=15.68

BNC: 238; F= 2.79

K=205

Appendix 2.1

The original meaning of ABACK is shown in the OED as 'in a backward direction; or towards the rear' with citations in Old English, taken from the West Saxon Chronicles from around the 9th century. The expression appears to have been in continuous use, particularly in regional and poetic language, with citations given up to 2005, although described as 'rare'. However, by the eighteenth century, the specialised, nautical use of ABACK in variants of the phrasal verb, TAKEN ABACK, had been established with citations dating from 1730 to the present day.

5.7.3.1 TAKE* ABACK

MTC; N = 58

BNC: N = 304

The OED (partially updated entry from 1910) lists TAKE ABACK as a phrasal verb With the meaning of:

'trans. (in pass.). Of a sail: to be suddenly pressed back against the mast, preventing forward progress, either through bad steering or a change in the wind. Of a ship, etc.: to be caught in this way.'

and figuratively as:

'trans.. To surprise, shock or discomfit. Chiefly in pass[ive]'.

Both literal and figurative uses are cited from the middle of the 17th century through to 2005.

The ALDs make no mention of a maritime meaning:

MMD

be taken aback

to be shocked or surprised, especially by something that someone says or does to you take someone aback shock or surprise someone:

ODP

Smyth records ABACK as a purely technical term, and TAKEN ABACK as both a technical and a figurative expression. (1867:11)

In the MTC, ABACK occurs 137 times; the original, non-maritime use, as cited in the OED, occurs only once:

- 1 I remembers him in irons well enough not more than a fortnight aback - and he's had a taste of the girl with nine tails, however--that's one comfort, to me, whatever he may turn out.' (MTC/ HF/HM/REE)

The technical, maritime specialisation occurs 101 times and the metaphorised form 34 times. The strongest collocate is TAKE*, which occurs 58 times. 28 of these occurrences with TAKE* are literal and 30 are metaphorised. The remaining four figurative instances use the verbs throw (x3) and catch (x1), which both echo maritime/technical uses: THROW* ... ABACK (x8), CATCH*...ABACK, (x3). In its technical application, pre-modification of ABACK is limited to all (x12):

- 2 With this strength of wind and sea Sparrow would never have recovered, could have been all aback and dismasted before anyone had realised what they were truly against. (MTC/ MF/AK/2) and flat (x7):

- 3 The masts are endangered by the course being so altered, as to bring it more in opposition to, and thereby increasing the pressure of the wind. In extreme cases the sails are caught flat aback, when the masts would be likely to give way, or the ship might go down stern foremost.

(MTC/HNF/WS/WOR)

and more rarely, full (x1), nearly (x2) and quietly (x1). In this technical usage, ABACK is not a fixed adverbial particle of a phrasal verb but carries full weight as an adverb in its own right, and allows for variation of the main verb; it may be copular, be, as in text 2 above, or one of a restricted number of action verbs: brace, bring, catch, come, hang, lay, press, remain, throw, work.

Her occurs with the technical rather than metaphorical use of ABACK,

- 4 By the time the Dutchman hauled his wind and gave over, the Nymph was close in with the shore, and a little later a freakish gust off Cape Branco took her aback, bringing her foremast by the board reflecting the fact that ships are always regarded as female, whereas him only occurs in metaphorical contexts.

(MTC/ MF/OB/DES)

- 5 When the Surgeon entered- a self-poised character of that grave sense and experience that hardly anything could take him aback,- Captain Vere advanced to meet him. (MTC/ HF/HM/1)

- 6 He felt as foolish as he sounded, but her sudden appearance had caught him entirely aback. (MTC/ MF/AK/2)

- 7 'By heaven, that threw him flat aback! He looked at me with his jaw hanging like a scandalised gaff. (MTC/ MF/RW/DRI)

In the metaphorised form of the expression, in addition to the intensifiers all and flat, we have clearly, completely, considerably, entirely, a little, more, quite, rather, so, so much, somewhat and too. Goatly (2011:186) points to the use of such intensifiers as clear markers of metaphoricity.

Goatly also notes that instances of 'semantic metalanguage' (ibid:188) may serve the same function, as the MTC data illustrates, where users' demonstrate an awareness of the process of metaphorisation that is taking place, through the deliberate marking or explanation of the change in meaning:

- 8 some of those little fellows that hold their heads so high would be taken all aback, as the saying is: they would be ashamed to show their colours, d-- my eyes! (MTC/HF/TS/2) (Smollet, 1751)

- 9 Captain Delmar was, to use a sailor's term, completely taken aback (MTC/HF/FM/6) (Marryat, 1842)

- 10 Mr. Kite observed this also, and remarked that our movements had been so prompt as 'to take the rascals aback.' He meant, they did not exactly know what we were at, and had not kept away with us. (MTC/HF/JFC/1) (Cooper, 1844)
- 11 The boy, in sea phrase, was taken all aback.
(Hood, 1840, cited in OED 2nd Ed., 1989)

In the BNC, the expression is only used metaphorically and has become fixed in the form TAKE* ABACK (most often as passive taken) as a phrasal verb (Halliday and Matthiessen, 2004:351), whose meaning cannot be recovered from its component parts. It is, in Moon's (1998) terms, a fixed expression, although, as with other phrasal verbs, there is some variation in complementation patterns. It occurs with numerous adverbial degree qualifiers including: somewhat (x18), a little (x15), so (x14), slightly (x13) and a further eight qualifiers accounting for another 41 instances in the corpus. Note however, that the maritime forms Flat and All are not found in the BNC data, a further indication of the increased distance from the expression's maritime roots.

The data here indicates a process of change from a simple adverb, ABACK, to the verb phrase TAKE ABACK, as a technical ME, to an increasingly restricted metaphorical phrasal verb, that has moved away completely from its original maritime usage in both form and meaning. In terms of metaphoricity, while the citations from MTC show it being used both literally and metaphorically by maritime writers, often consciously exploiting its resonances for effect, in the modern discourse, as represented by the BNC, it is always figurative, there are no such exploitations of maritime resonances and it does not appear in extended metaphors. In Hanks' terms (2006:23), the process of metaphorisation is complete, with TAKE* ABACK now being purely idiomatic in use.

5.7.4 ALOOF

MTC: N=58; F=7

BNC: N=184; F=2

K=45

Appendix 2.30

According to The OED, ALOOF derives from a-luff, from early Middle English lof, loof: a steering device in early vessels. It is defined as:

- '1. Naut. To the windward side; towards the direction from which the wind blows; (in later use) esp. on a course close to the wind, usually so as to stay clear of the shore or a hazard. Freq. in to keep aloof: to sail close to the wind.

Now hist.'

It is cited from 1535 and still being used in that sense in 1990, albeit in poetic prose for stylistic effect. The salient features of the expression of distance and physical unapproachability have produced a general meaning of:

- 2 gen. To or at a distance from something; far off; separately, apart
- 3 fig. Freq. with from. Apart from another person or group (with respect to one's attitudes, actions, or interests), usually suggesting a lack of sympathy or common ground. Also: having a conspicuous lack of involvement in a certain situation. Also in extended use, with reference to organizations, attitudes, etc. Usu. in to stand (or keep, hold, etc.) aloof (from).'

Citations for these meanings date from 1544 to the present day. Smyth defines it as:

The old word for 'keep your luff' In the act of sailing to the wind. -Keep aloof, at a distance'. (1867:33)

And

'ALUFFE, OR ALOOF. Nearer to the wind. This is a very old form of luff, being noticed by Matthew Paris, and other writers, as a sea-term.' (ibid:34)⁵⁰

The MMD makes no allusion to the original maritime meaning, simply defining it as someone who is aloof, or who remains or stays aloof from something, is not friendly or does not want to be involved in something.

The ODP gives it as

Not friendly or forthcoming; cool and distant
Conspicuously uninvolved

ALOOF is an excellent example of an ME moving into the general discourse through the process of metaphorisation. The MTC has four examples of the expression's use in its original technical sense in citations dating from 1805 to 1890

- 1 that the Marlborough performed this operation; that so far from being kept aloof during the action, she obeyed this signal of the Admiral.
(MTC/N/NC/9) (1805)
- 2 We saw a great many sail, particularly as we approached the Straits of Dover, and kept as much aloof from all as circumstances would allow.
(MTC/ HF/JFC/1) (1844)
- 3 Bayliss wanted to reply with a carronade; but Dodd forbade him sternly, saying, 'If we keep him aloof we are done for.'
(MTC/HF/JLF/SEA)(1863)
- 4 The 'Alliance,' which had stood aloof during the heat of the conflict, now appeared, and, after firing a few shots into the 'Serapis,' ranged slowly

⁵⁰ By the time Smyth was writing his dictionary in 1886, the term seems to have become part of the general discourse, and was being used almost entirely metaphorically, even by maritime writers, however it was still specialised enough in the maritime discourse to warrant two entries. Matthew Paris, was a Benedictine monk, writing in the early 13th century (McGovern, 2002:1166) down along the 'Richard,' pouring a murderous fire of grape-shot into the already shattered ship. (MTC/ HNF/WA/USN) (1890)

In each of these examples ALOOF means 'to windward' and thus unapproachable by any vessel downwind. The remaining lines in the MTC all use this idea of distance and unapproachability in the figurative use of the term:

- 5 After having thus speedily settled these little matters, as I was fast approaching my fortieth year, I began to alter my style, and live in a manner more befitting my rank and revenues; yet I still held much aloof from all intimacy with my neighbours. (MTC/ HF/HM/REE)

While, in the BNC data, only figurative uses are found:

- 6 He was himself a member of the prince's council, and although he is unlikely to have played much part in its activities this is only to be expected from a nobleman of his rank and does not mean that he remained aloof from the king's plans for the region. (BNC/HWK)
- 7 Personally Radcliffe-Brown could appear politely overbearing on a wide variety of subjects, and in later life somewhat aloof, though not without glimpses of his urbane sociability and intellectual panache. (BNC/ GTC)
- 8 'The fact that the Labour Party is standing aloof looks ominous.'
(BNC/AC0)

The original maritime usage is now obsolete. In modern usage there is no exploitation of maritime resonances and the expression is now fully lexicalised in its denotative figurative use, making it a purely idiomatic expression.

5.7.5 FLOAT (V) (Lemma)

MTC: N=1168; F=134

BNC: N=3634; F=430

Appendix 2.18.1

The OED entry, which has not been fully updated since the original entry in 1897, shows FLOAT to be derived from OE Flotian, with citations from the Anglo-Saxon Chronicles dating from 1031. FLOAT is defined as:

- 'a. To rest on the surface of any liquid; to be buoyed up; to be or become buoyant.
- b. Of a stranded vessel: To get off the ground, to get afloat.
- c. fig. to float in one's cups : to be half drunk, 'half seas over'.'

In particular, note the description of the figurative use at c, above, demonstrating the exploitation of strong maritime resonances in the gloss 'half seas over'.

In addition to the maritime uses, the ODP lists:

- 3 [with object] put forward (an idea) as a suggestion or test of reactions.
- 4 (of a currency) fluctuate freely in value in accordance with supply and demand in the financial markets:

And the MMD gives:

- [Transitive] BUSINESS. To start to sell a company's shares on the stock market
- [Transitive] to suggest an idea for people to consider to see how they will react.
- [Intransitive/Transitive] ECONOMICS if a government floats its currency, its value is allowed to change in relation to other currencies

In the MTC, FLOAT is overwhelmingly used in its literal maritime sense although there are occasional examples of its figurative use:

- 1 And addressed us in a brogue so strong, that it would, like the boatswain's grog, have floated a marlin-spike (MTC/ HF/HM/REE)
(Marryat, 1838)
- 2 I parted from him as if he were a mere symbol. I floated down the staircase. I floated out of the official and imposing portal. I went on floating along. (MTC/ HF/JC/5) (Conrad, 1917)

In the BNC data, a key use of FLOAT is in financial/business contexts, defined by the OED as:

'd. transf. Finance. Of a currency: to fluctuate as regards its international exchange rate. Also trans., to arrange for (a currency) so to fluctuate.'

Citations for this use date only from 1965. The key to this figurative use of FLOAT lies in the conceptual metaphors of FINANCE = SEA and BUSINESS ENTERPRISE = SHIP

- 3 The construction materials division, which employs more than 4,200 people, is to be floated as a separate company. (BNC/K3W)
- 4 Chubb's bumper accounts CHUBB Security, which was floated off from Racal Electronics last October, today published a sparkling first set of accounts as a separate company. (BNC/K3N)
- 5 How many pensioners would be floated off means-tested income support if a £5 and £8 increase in the national insurance pension was not matched by a similar change in the income support rate. (BNC/FAF)

Note that floated off in Text 5 carries a different meaning to its use in text 4, which concerns the financial flotation of a company and, while still used in a financial context, to be an industrial metaphor, more in line with (6) below:

- 6 Cleaning is carried out with hot detergent solution during which the coating is dissolved enabling the soil to be floated off. (BNC/APV)

In the BNC, the passive construction, BE + FLOATED, is used 115 times and is almost exclusively figurative, usually in the financial domain, except for 13 lines about the 'floating' of ideas, generally in the fields of politics, debate and research, exploiting the conceptual metaphor of POLITICS = SEA, e.g.

- 7 The best chance of making this plan work comes from a new idea now being secretly floated in the electronics industry. (BNC/ANX)

None of these figurative uses of FLOAT exploit maritime resonances and their dictionary definitions in the ALDs suggest that these are now primary rather than secondary senses and thus should be regarded as idiomatic uses.

FLOATING (ADJ.)

A further significant difference in usage, between the two corpora is in the adjectival use of FLOATING. The collocates list (App 2.18.1.2: Table18) and concordance data shows that, in the MTC, all occurrences of FLOATING (Adj.) are literal / maritime, e.g.

- 9 When the sloop was in the midst of them, Newton hove-to, tossed out the little skiff, and, in the course of an hour... brought alongside, and contrived to parbuckle in, the casks, and as many others of the floating articles as he could conveniently stow upon her decks. (MTC/ HF/FM/5)

In the BNC, there is a large group of highly specialised terms that use FLOATING as an adjectival prefix in noun phrases such as FLOATING CHARGE (x 106), FLOATING (EXCHANGE/INTEREST) RATE(S) (x101) from financial markets, FLOATING POINT (x177) in mathematics, and FLOATING VOTE(RS) (x39) in politics (See App 2.18.1.2: Table 19 for full list).

- 10 Floating-point format, then, represents arithmetic quantities in the form , where b is a fixed number known as the base or radix. (BNC/EUS)

FLOATING ABOUT

In addition to these specialised fixed phrases, FLOAT is also used in both corpora in idiomatic phrases with the adverb about. In the MTC FLOAT* ABOUT is always used literally, e.g.

- 11 we must have come round and gone over the same ground again, for we now passed many relics of the scene, floating about in the water.
(MTC/ HF/JFC/1)

Whereas, in the BNC the phrase is generally used metaphorically of objects, ideas and people with the meaning of aimless or random presence, usually, but not exclusively, in the present continuous form:

- 12 it is unlikely that we shall ever be able directly to detect tachyons (although there are some interesting ideas floating about concerning the consequences were we able to). (BNC/CET)

- 13 'I didn't go in,' said Constance.
 'I saw DI Damples floating about, so I went straight past.
 We don't want to get mixed up with him.' (BNC/G1D)

FLOAT AROUND

Another fixed expression FLOAT* AROUND, appears only once, in the MTC, where it is used literally:

- 14 Hooked and tangled in it were all kinds of horrors including rotten, dead sea-birds. It must have been floating around out here for years.
 (MTC/WT/BOB)

but occurs 76 times in the BNC; 75% of the lines are figurative

- 15 There was a lot of bad feeling floating around her house and by opening the windows she hoped to let it out. (BNC/KBV)
- 16 Cuckney challenges the view that there are vast sums of money locked up in pension funds floating around the City that could be diverted towards helping struggling small firms to grow. (BNC/A6L)

While FLOAT retains its original maritime meanings related to physical buoyancy, in the general discourse, the corpus evidence suggests that its figurative use has become increasingly specialised in certain fields, especially finance, mathematics and politics. New idiomatic usages such as FLOAT ABOUT/AROUND, are not recorded in the OED, although the original 1897 entry for Float (v) has yet to be fully updated. The ALDs now give these idiomatic phrases, and the specialised terminology of economics, mathematics and politics, equal weight. The form of these specialised uses is generally fixed and maritime resonances are not exploited. All these uses of FLOAT can therefore be regarded as idiomatic.

5.7.6 AWASH

MTC: N=47;; F=5.38

BNC: N=143; F=1.62

K=41

Appendix 2.50

In the OED, citations for AWASH are relatively modern; the earliest dating from only 1883. It is first cited in the 1912 edition and is defined as:

- 'adv. (and adj.) 1. On a level or flush with the surface of the water, so that it just washes over.'
 '2. a. Washing about, at the mercy of the waves.'
 'b. fig. Esp. const. with: full of or abounding in; overflowing or rife with',

Smyth's definition is very specific and technical:

A-WASH. Reefs even with the surface. The anchor just rising to the water's edge, in heaving up. (1867:63)

The earliest citation in the MTC comes from Cooper 'Afloat and Ashore' (1844), which, incidentally, is a figurative use:

- 1 This occupied another hour, before we were entirely through, when the land was getting nearly 'awash'. (MTC/ HF/JFC/1)

Here the term refers to the land slipping out of sight below the horizon. Note that the author has placed AWASH in quotation marks to signal to the reader that this is a non-standard use of the expression. Other than this and Smyth's use of the term in 1867, other texts are all late nineteenth to early twentieth century or later.

In the MTC, there are just five figurative occurrences of AWASH, including the line cited above and:

- 2 At the time of the American War of Independence the Caribbean was awash with American Pirates and their like. (MTC/WT/N/SS)
- 3 You could cram your head just so much. After that the mind became awash and confused beyond reason (MTC/MF/AK/2) and two lines, from the same author, referring to drink

- 4 David. Would you like to say your piece before all your guests are awash? A bit of grub might do wonders then!' (MTC/ MF/DR/1)
- 5 The first time I see you with crossed hooks on your sleeve, Fernie, I'll set up the pints until you're awash!' ((MTC/ MF/DR/1))

The remaining uses are literal, e.g.:

- 6 They say that for over ten minutes hardly anything was to be seen of the ship--just the three masts and a bit of the forecastle head and of the poop all awash driving along in a smother of foam.
(MTC/HF/JC/1)

In the list of collocates from the MTC (App. 2.50; Table 54), there is only one lexical item, WATER, which occurs three times, in the phrase AWASH WITH WATER e.g.

- 7 The Dara, a burnt-out wreck, remained afloat for two more days. On April 10, awash with water from the hoses of the three British navy frigates and an American destroyer that had fought the fire, she capsized and sank while being towed to be beached north of Dubai. (MTC/N/WW/11)

The BNC collocates⁵¹ list is also made up predominantly of grammatical words, but in addition we also have the lexical items, OIL, WATER and WORLD in the first 15 collocates. The top collocate is WITH; the BNC clusters list (Table 35) helps to explain why:

Table 35: BNC: AWASH; Clusters list.

N	Cluster	Freq.
1	IS AWASH WITH	20
2	WAS AWASH WITH	16
3	WERE AWASH WITH	8
4	AWASH WITH THE	8
5	ARE AWASH WITH	7
6	BEEN AWASH WITH	7
7	BE AWASH WITH	6
8	WAS AWASH WITH THE	5
9	HAD BEEN AWASH	5

There are 100 concordances in the BNC containing AWASH WITH and they are all figurative, e.g.:

- 8 I gave the senator a cynical glance.
'Plenty of temptation in the Bahamas.
The islands are awash with drugs.' (BNC/ CCW)
- 9 Twoflower sat down on his bunk and tried to think.
This proved difficult, because his mind was awash with dragons.
(BNC/HA3)

Also found in the BNC data, is AWASH IN, which occurs 12 times, 11 of which are figurative uses, e.g.:

- 10 With consumption forecast to rise by 2% in 1989 - and with demand for OPEC oil expected to be at least 1m b/d less than the cartels supply during the second quarter - the world could again be awash in oil in a matter of months. (BNC/HSF)
- 11 The shareholders in Velcro have received no dividends in 1989 and 1990, despite the fact that pre-tax earnings have grown from $6.3 million in 1988 to $9.4 million in 1990, and the company is awash in liquidity with marketable securities as of 30 September 1990 worth slightly less than $50 million. (BNC/EDT)

There are no instances of this construction in the MTC.

⁵¹ NB. The BNC data for AWASH required some additional cleaning as it included one particular text (BNC/HOA) about the Awash River in Ethiopia, which resulted in 25 occurrences of the phrases Awash River and Awash Station so that STATION and RIVER appeared at the top of the collocates list. These 25 concordances were therefore removed, in order to more properly reflect the use of the term in the general discourse as represented by the BNC.

In the BNC, AWASH appears to be moving from literal towards more metaphorical meanings; note that the OED citations for the figurative use date only from 1912; the few figurative examples in the MTC are also from more modern texts. In the BNC it is used in a literal, maritime context only 19 times in 143 concordance lines, and has developed fixed forms such as AWASH WITH/IN that are rarely found in its original literal use in a maritime context.

The fixed forms, AWASH WITH and AWASH IN, reinforce the points made by Cruse (1986), Deignan (2005) and Hanks (2006) about post-modification as an indicator of metaphoricality. There are three literal instances (lines 10-12 above) in the MTC data, of AWASH WITH WATER, which, in the context of ships at sea, would appear to be tautological, they are, however, post-modified to justify the specificity of WATER:

- 12 On April 10, awash with water from the hoses of the three British navy frigates and an American destroyer that had fought the fire (MTC/N/WW/11)
- 13 hitting each wave as if it were something solid, her forecastle awash with the white water which came leaping over her port bow. (MTC/ MF/CSF/2)
- 14 The ship was awash with water even between decks. (MTC/WT/46)

In metaphorical uses, in both the MTC and the BNC, WITH and IN highlight the particular non-literal use of the expression in exactly the same way as the 'partitive OF' is used in Hanks' examples of A SEA OF ... (2006:18), as seen in the analysis of ADRIFT (5.6.6, p249).

A further point of interest with AWASH is the strong negative prosody of the expression when used metaphorically.

- 15 Only six winters earlier, respectable London had been awash with fears of violent crime. (BNC/EDE)
- 16 The backstage area at G-Mex was awash with unadulterated sycophancy. (BNC/ART)
- 17 Red velvet curtains closed out the Devon night, and the bar was awash with the drunken summer school intelligentsia. (BNC/HGF)
- 18 I have no access to his thoughts - but I am awash with his emotions.
I am a crocodile in the thick river of his feeling tone.
And you know what?
Each glance, each pair of eyes, even as they narrow in ingenuous appraisal, draws a bead on something inside him, and I sense the heat of fear and shame. (BNC/FYV)

- 19 When I ask the fat ladies at the drop-in centre what is the one thing that would do most to improve the estate they say 'get rid of the kids' and they are only half joking.
The age structure of Meadowell means it is awash with teenagers, whose only pastimes are having babies and body-building. (BNC/AHF)

Even where the sense would seem to be apparently positive, as in texts 20 and 21, about monetary wealth and oil riches, the tone is, in fact, pejorative:

- 20 'Random tests are an expensive business and as the IAAF are awash with money they need to look at how they are spending it. If they're serious, they should put more money in and do something about it.' (BNC/AJ3)
- 21 Developing countries have been climbing hard throughout the 1980s, only to see the summit receding farther up beyond the clouds.
In the 1970s they were eagerly offered loans by Western banks suddenly awash with oil riches; in the 1980s the debt collectors have come knocking.
Put like that and you might think they had it coming. (BNC/HH3)

In 22, AWASH is used to signal the fact that the rumours being circulated are damaging to the parties involved; hinting at an extra marital affair between film star Antonio Banderas and singer Madonna.

- 22 Hollywood was awash with rumours some months later when Banderas came to Los Angeles for Mambo Kings , paid a visit to Madonna's house and was spotted dining with her on several occasions.(BNC/CGB)

Text 23 comes from a computer-training course and is effectively a warning about the over-complexity of software provision in the computing world, as an introduction to basic keyboard skills.

- 23 The world's computer market is awash with software programs for every kind of application. (BNC/B26)

And finally, in 24, 'relief' might be regarded as positive, however, the context and the use of AWASH make it clear that the relief is undeserved and morally suspect.

- 24 'You don't mean all this personally, do you, Charles?'
He looked up, his face awash with relief.
'No I don't.
You're right, I don't.
I'm glad you can see that, Dorothy.
I'm not trying to hurt you, I promise you. (BNC/AOF)

Out of 143 concordance lines for AWASH, in the BNC, 95 are either overtly, or by implication, negative uses while a further 19 lines are literal, mainly maritime uses, of which all but two are distinctly negative. There are 29 lines that might be regarded as positive or at least neutral metaphorical uses, 12 of which are particularly concerned with light or colour, as in texts 25 and 26:

- 25 Their eyes were on the Miracle-Worker, the Angel Gabriel, perched in motionless splendour on a silver-gilded cloud, his hair awash with sunlight and his magical face worn like a mask
(BNC/HTN)

- 26 As he got closer he could see that the flowerbeds at the front were awash with colour; yellows, reds, blues, whites. (BNC/HUA)

In this positive/neutral group there is also a single example of AWASH being used in an extended maritime metaphor:

- 27 Otto and Jean-Claude exchanged cherished memories.
Jean-Claude's went back to the time when the region was awash with oceans of rye, Otto's to the time when the Demoiselles Tatin were still alive. (BNC/FAT)

The data suggests that generally, AWASH is a strongly negative term; the negative prosody originally coming from the maritime hazards exemplified in citations such as 28 and 29 from the MTC:

- 28 Wave crests broke and lashed aboard, the reeling boat was soon awash, and the spare men had to bale frantically to keep her afloat. (MTC/HF/JLF/SEA)
- 29 Suddenly, half-concealed in the tumult of the foaming rollers I made out awash, something enormous, rising and falling-something spread out like a burst of foam, but with a more bluish, more solid look. It was a piece of an ice-floe melted down to a fragment, but still big enough to sink a ship, and floating lower than any raft (MTC/ HF/JC/3)

Here, the resonances of AWASH are with inundation, drowning, and foundering. In the rarer, positive uses, regarding colours, light or flowers, the salient features are superabundance and richness, and in the case of colour descriptions, perhaps suggest links with other water-related words used to describe colours such as colour saturation in photography and depth of colour.

Despite the transparency of AWASH as a maritime term, the explicit exploitation of maritime resonances is very rare in the data. There are very few extended maritime metaphors and only the negative prosody of the original maritime use is still strongly evoked, especially in terms of the resonances of drowning and sinking. AWASH appears to have become idiomatified, its figurative use being signalled by the fixed forms AWASH WITH, and AWASH IN.

5.7.7 CLEAR* FOR ACTION:

CLEAR FOR ACTION: MTC: N=97
BNC: N=3
CLEAR THE DECK(S): MTC: 54
BNC: 31

(Appendix 2.8.2)

In the OED, a number of maritime phrases, including clear the coast and clear the decks are cited, but there is no specific entry for CLEAR FOR ACTION, despite the fact that in the MTC data, there are 54 instances of CLEAR THE DECK(S) compared to 97 instances of CLEAR FOR ACTION. In its original entry from 1899, the OED records two examples of the phrase, in citations used in support of the specialised maritime use of CLEAR, defined as:

- b. In various specific uses, as
 - (a) To prepare (a ship) for action by removing everything that is in the way, from the decks, etc.

In the ALDs, only CLEAR THE DECKS is defined

ODP:

clear the decks

prepare for an event or course of action by dealing with anything that might hinder progress:

MMD

clear the decks

to get rid of everything that is not needed, or to deal with everything that needs to be done so that you can start doing something more important

Smyth (1867:190)

CLEAR, TO. Has several significations, particularly to escape from, to unload, to empty, to prepare, &c., as:--To clear for action. To prepare for action.--To clear away for this or that, is to get obstructions out of the way.--To clear the decks. To remove lumber, put things in their places, and coil down the ropes.

To CLEAR FOR ACTION in a warship was a very precise and ordered evolution requiring the removal not just of loose gear and clutter, but the removal of bulkheads and rearranging of the entire ship from stem to stern to make it an efficient fighting platform. The MTC data shows that the expression was in use in 1798 (Thomas, 1798) and fixed in formal/ official use in 1805, as witnessed by numerous of citations from the Naval Chronicle of that year.

Generally there is little variation in form other than where an object is inserted into the phrase (i.e. to clear something for action):

- 1 'A whisper ran along the crew, that the stranger ship was a Yankee frigate. The thought was confirmed by the command of 'All hands clear the ship for action, ahoy!' The drum and fife beat to quarters,' or where there is passivisation:

(MTC/ HNF/WA/USN)

- 2 In justice to my brother Commanders I must state, that every Ship was clear and prepared for action. (MTC/N/NC9)

These are, with one exception, all technical uses; the one figurative use coming from Marryat (1829):

- 3 The next day I took my seat, cleared for action--coat, waistcoat, and neckcloth off. I observed that I should proceed as I had done before.
(MTC/ HF/FM/1)

CLEAR THE DECKS is always used in its literal/technical sense in the MTC, although there are shades of meaning, from tidying up after taking on stores or removing battle or storm debris, to making the crew go below or of using cannon fire to clear the enemy's decks of men, thus lacking the precision in meaning of CLEAR FOR ACTION. It is also more varied in form, with the singular form CLEAR THE DECK, in particular being used with various modifiers and often having a very specific technical meaning:

- 4 The first was the occasion of a 'Clear lower deck'. A 'Clear lower deck' is called after a member of the ship's company has been court martialled and found guilty-all the ship's company assemble on the quarter deck to be told of the charge and the sentence. (MTC/WT/23)

It is also used to describe the effect of cannon or musket fire or heavy seas:

- 5 'I directed the fire of one of the three cannon against the main-mast with double-headed shot, while the other two were exceedingly well served with grape and canister shot, to silence the enemy's musketry, and clear her decks, which was at last effected. (MTC/ HNF/WA/USN)
- 6 To my surprise, and the second mate's open-mouthed astonishment, the skipper, who was highly elated with his morning's trading, told the mate to clear the decks, and get ready to heave up. (MTC/HF/LB/PIG)

In the BNC, only three lines contain the target ME, CLEAR FOR ACTION and all are used figuratively.

- 7 He saw himself as the only point of free will in the landscape before him, and if he could move his body with a purpose, then his mind would shake off the slough of misery and clear for action. (BNC/FP1)
- 8 Old Windsor, Berks, would take medical cases, Shenfield would take shocked soldiers and Queen Mary, Roehampton, burns.
So off they went and the decks were really cleared for action. (BNC/B2E)
- 9 'Thank goodness you're back' said one of the clerks who had been seconded to us from County Hall. 'It's clear the decks for action.'

(BNC/B2E)

Curiously, CLEAR also collocates strongly with ACTION, within four words to the right of the node (CLEAR), in a further 32 lines (App 2.8.2: Fig.64), perhaps suggesting that the expression CLEAR FOR ACTION has had a wider influence on the language than might at first seem apparent.

- 10 In many situations, actors are faced with no clear rules for action, or the action may be hard to sustain. (BNC/EDH)
- 11 The UNP's comfortable parliamentary majority and the fact that the Premadasa regime faced no imminent electoral test after February 1989, left the political opposition without a clear focus for action in 1990.

CLEAR FOR ACTION does not appear to exploit maritime resonances when used in the BNC. There are 31 occurrences of CLEAR THE DECKS in the BNC and of these, all but three are figurative, but just one exploits the maritime resonances of the original ME

- 12 The General, half the beast it used to be and back in the red at the mid-point of 1992, will be lucky to break even this year, despite vast attempts over the last three years to clear the decks and keep a tight ship.
(BNC/CTH)

The corpus evidence suggests strongly that both CLEAR FOR ACTION and CLEAR THE DECKS no longer exploit maritime resonances and, in particular, CLEAR THE DECKS is now a purely idiomatic expression.

5.7.8 GET UNDER WEIGH/WAY

	MTC	BNC
GET UNDER WEIGH	234	-
GET UNDER WAY	88	200
UNDER WAY	210	954

Appendix 2.52.1

GET UNDER WEIGH, UNDERWEIGH and UNDER WAY are included here as being directly related to Aweigh and AWAY as MEs (see 5.4.13:189).

The OED (1st Ed. 1926) describes UNDERWEIGH as a variation of UNDER WAY 'from erroneous association with the phr. 'to weigh anchor'. UNDER WAY is described as being of Dutch origin onderweg (also -wegen), with the precise meaning:

Of a vessel: Having begun to move through the water.

Various nautical dictionaries including Young (1863) and Smyth (1867) have pointed out that the terms UNDER WEIGH and UNDER WAY are not synonyms

UNDER WAY. A ship beginning to move under her canvas after her anchor is started. Some have written this under weigh, but improperly. A ship is 'under weigh' when she has 'weighed' her anchor: she may be with or without canvas, or hove-to. As soon as she gathers way she is 'under way'. This a moot point with old seamen. (Smyth, 1867:706)

The MMD entry shows UNDER WAY as being lexicalised to form a new compound adverb:

UNDERWAY- already started or happening.

While the ODP gives both the original and compounded versions of the phrase and also provides a maritime definition.

In the MTC, WEIGH occurs 379 times in total, with 234 of these appearing in the phrase GET UNDER WEIGH. Of these, 84 come from a single author (Batten, 1881) where the expression is used in a journal. UNDER WEIGH occurs in texts dating from 1797 to 2011 in the MTC.

- 1 Monday 11th March. Sailed the American Frigates Constellation of 44 Guns. Commodore Truxon, and L'Insurgent. -- Got under weigh, met Captain Matson in a Boat. (MTC/ L/AT/THO) (1797)
- 2 The Rev'd Mr. Masset and Captain [blank] went aboard the P of W for a Passage to Martinico. At 9 AM got under weigh (MTC/ L/AT/THO)
- 3 Last mail ashore tomorrow forenoon. We get under weigh at thirteen-hundred (MTC/ MF/DR/1)

As with AWEIGH, the term is technical and signifies a precise point in the process of leaving an anchorage, that is, that point when the ship is no longer attached to the seabed by an anchor but not yet under power (wind or engine). This meaning is reinforced in the concordances by the presence of various time references such as: 'at this time', 'at five this morning', 'at thirteen hundred' now, immediately, before, AM, PM, at dusk, as well as verbs of movement: arrive, steam, proceed, hove to. This pattern is common to virtually all of the 234 lines in the MTC.

The expression does not occur at all in the BNC, while GET UNDER WAY occurs 200 times, with four lines being used in the original maritime sense of GET UNDER WEIGH. The time references seen in the MTC, are also present in both maritime and figurative uses: tide, soon, once more, 'lost no time', no time was lost.

- 4 The silence was eased by a long wail from a ship's hooter from downstream.
It was a signal peculiar to Thames river - I am about to get under way.
(BNC/H0R)

The homophonic clash of weigh and way, appears to have resulted in the virtual disappearance of UNDER WEIGH, in its maritime sense, even in maritime contexts. WEIGH only survives now in the fixed expressions of ANCHOR'S AWEIGH and WEIGH ANCHOR (See 5.4.12, p187).

In the BNC, GET UNDER WAY appears to be a simple transference of the sense of motion or progress from the maritime use to more or less abstract concepts, processes or events:

- 5 A series of Friday night swim discos get under way at Bishop Auckland's Woodhouse Close leisure complex next month. (BNC/K52)
- 6 As general election campaigns got under way Andreotti on March 18 issued a communiqué to Italy's 92 civil governors warning that certain forces were attempting to disrupt the electoral process. (BNC/HLH)
- 7 It is open to professional, amateur and novice stone-wallers, and the contest gets under way at 9.30am. (BNC/ACX)
- 8 It is quite possible that a number of other political changes would have got under way more recently were it not for the direct intervention of Pope John Paul II and the Vatican. (BNC/AO7)

Where the MCMs of EVENT/PROCESS = SHIP, PROGRESS = VOYAGE, ENTERPRISE = SHIP are realised.

GET UNDER WAY/WEIGH is classified as an ME. The expression has moved from a precise, literal, technical description of the complex mechanics of leaving an anchorage, to exploit the salient features of that process in a metaphorical expression of beginning a metaphorical voyage, by severing connections with the point of departure, with complex resonances with ideas of momentum and direction. The corpus data shows little evidence of awareness, on the part of users, of any maritime connection, and certainly none with the technical expression UNDER WEIGH. Maritime resonances are never exploited and the relationship between the original maritime and current figurative expressions is homonymic; Outside the maritime discourse, the expression is now purely idiomatic.

5.7.9 TAKE ABOARD / TAKE ON BOARD

TAKE ABOARD

MTC: N=34

BNC: N=18

Appendix: 2.4.6

In the MTC all occurrences of TAKE ABOARD are literal uses, with the meaning of Receiving goods, equipment or personnel on to a ship e.g.

- 1 Thursday, May 16, the Valley City steamed up to Ergot's Landing, and took aboard thirty-nine bales of cotton.(MTC/L/JB/REM)

In the BNC however, of 18 occurrences, 12 are maritime but there are also six figurative uses of the expression:

- 2 these are the members' promises and er, erm, we've got to be careful that er when they're all drawn together that we aren't making a hostage fortune, erm and so that I think it is very important members take aboard er what is suggested and test them themselves to see that they are realistic. (BNC/KN3)
- 3 Totally Piste, Barry Waters's third essay into survival skiing, now takes aboard heli- and mono-skiing and powder.
For example: 'Going off piste is usually more for the instructor's sake than yours.' (BNC/AA0)

None of the dictionaries consulted have entries for this figurative use of ABOARD which seems to be a variant of TAKE ON BOARD (see below):

TAKE ON BOARD

MTC: N=346

BNC: N= 15

The OED has the following definition

e. to take on board (fig.), to drink or consume; to swallow; also, to accept (an idea, etc.), to grasp.

This is further simplified in the ODP to Informal fully consider or assimilate a new idea or situation

In Figure 38, below, the extracts from the MTC all show the source meaning of the expression as physically receiving goods, equipment or people on to a ship. There are a number of specifically maritime collocates, including sea, sail of the line (1), coast (2), frigates, vessels (3). Furthermore the objects taken aboard are all concrete entities: provisions (1), eight Frenchmen, Mons. Prejant (2), battery (3).

- 1 For this purpose he put to sea from Carlisle Bay, with 22 Sail of the Line, and proceeded to Antigua, where he took on board some provisions, with the 28th, and two companies of the 4th regiment of foot, under the command of General Prescott. (MTC/N/NC9)
- 2 AT five A.M. we took on board eight Frenchmen, together with Mons. Prejant, from off the coast of France, where the greater part of them had been employed on secret service (MTC/N/NC/20)
- 3 When the head of the British column entered Whitehall, the two new American frigates 'Washington' and 'Effingham' were wrapped in flames. Both were new vessels, and neither had yet taken on board her battery.
(MTC/ HNF/WA/USN)

BNC

- 4 Those visions come from within ourselves. Come from the way in which we don't necessarily take on board what we are learning. (BNC/KB0)
- 5 Our business is to ensure that what we are doing now is done properly, not to take on board new activities and try and finance them at the expense of groups which are already suffering very poor, or at least inadequate services. (BNC/KRL)
- 6 I would be pleased if you could now take on board the extension of formal smoking at work restrictions as applied at Regional Headquarters and Regional Chambers to apply to Chesser House and for this to be formally agreed by the Council. (BNC/HD2)

In the BNC texts 4-6, the total absence of any maritime collocates and thus of maritime resonances suggests the idiomatisation of the expression, which has become purely abstract, with meanings of understanding and assimilation of ideas (4), acceptance of additional unnecessary financial commitments (5) and adoption and implementation of legislation (6). In these three texts, TAKE ON BOARD realises a number of maritime conceptual metaphors: THE MIND = SHIP, BUSINESS = SHIP, RESPONSIBILITY = CARGO/BURDEN and IDEAS = CARGO.

Current ALDs, such as MMD, give no hint of any maritime usage or origin for the expression:

- Take something on board
- To consider an idea, problem, or situation and try to deal with it.

Thus the loss of resonance with the original maritime source has resulted in a loss of metaphoricity so that, for most users, the maritime and non-maritime uses are, at best, homonymous and TO TAKE ON BOARD has become a purely idiomatic phrase.

5.7.10 ALTER* COURSE

MTC: N= 227; F=31.7

BNC: N=1755; F= 20.5

Appendix 2.32

ALTER* is not an ME per se, that is, the word did not originate from maritime use to become absorbed into the general discourse. The top collocate of ALTER in the MTC is COURSE, which appears a total of 185 times out of a total of 227 occurrences (81%) of ALTER, within five words of the node, suggesting that ALTER* + COURSE is a specifically maritime combination. The closely synonymous expression CHANGE* (of) COURSE occurs 32 times. The OED gives no specifically nautical definition for ALTER, or citations for ALTER COURSE, nor do the two words appear together in any of the definitions of ALTER or COURSE.

The OED defines ALTER as:

Anglo Norman : change or modify (person or thing)

1. trans.

a. To make (a person or thing) otherwise or different in some respect; to modify, to change the appearance of. Also intr.

While COURSE is given as originating from Middle English and the French cours, and is cited from the late 13th century with the meaning

a. Onward movement in a particular path, as of the heavenly bodies, a ship, etc.

Thus from its earliest recorded uses it has been used in maritime contexts. The OED goes on to give two specifically nautical senses:

12. a. Naut. The direction in which, or point of the compass towards which, a ship sails. Hence transf. of the direction or line pursued by an ocean-current, mountain-chain, vein of ore, etc. Also of aircraft: the (correct) line or direction of flight.

VI. Naut.

33. Each of the sails attached to the lower yards of a ship; now usually restricted to the fore-sail (fore-course) and main-sail (main-course). Formerly including also the stay-sails upon the lower masts: cf. quot. 1769.

Smyth gives no definition of the composite phrase ALTER COURSE, but has two entries for COURSE:

COURSE. The direction taken by anything in motion, shown by the point of the compass 'towards' which they run, as water in a river, tides, and currents; but of the wind, as similarly indicated by the compass-point 'from' which it blows. Course is also the ship's way. In common parlance, it is the point of the compass upon which the ship sails, the direction in which she proceeds, or is intended to go. When the wind is foul, she cannot 'lie her course;' if free, she 'steers her course.' (1867:218)

COURSES.⁵² A name by which the sails hanging from the lower yards of a ship are usually distinguished, viz. the main-sail, fore-sail, and mizen: the staysails upon the lower masts are sometimes also comprehended in this denomination, as are the main staysails of all brigs and schooners. A ship is under her courses when she has no sail set but the fore-sail, main-sail, and mizen. 'Trysails' are courses (which see), sometimes termed 'bentincks'.
(1867:218)

The MMD also cites COURSE as being used particularly in maritime/aviation contexts:

the direction that a vehicle, especially a ship or plane, is travelling in or plans to travel in.

All instances of ALTER + COURSE in the MTC are literal and apply to ships or boats, never to individual people, plans or ideas. Furthermore, the patterns of use tend to be formulaic and the register is generally formal, as demonstrated by text 1 below, taken from the official account in the Naval Chronicle of 1806, of the Court Martial of Admiral Sir Robert Calder, concerning his failure to destroy Villeneuve's French fleet off Finisterre in 1805 (Howarth, 1969:62).

- 1 Q. Did the British fleet alter their course by sailing from the wind more to the eastward, thereby increasing their distance from the enemy?
(MTC/N/NC/1806)
- 2 She had sighted us long before we noticed her; and seeing from our altering our course now that we desired to speak her, she downed her helm and was soon alongside the sampan. (MTC/ HF/JCH/AF)
- 3 At thirty minutes after two we found we had closed the squadron considerably, in consequence of their having altered their course a point to the westward. (MTC/N/NC/1806)
- 4 'Alter course five points to starboard!' (MTC/MF/AK/2)
- 5 Dumaresq said, 'Alter course three points to starboard.' (MTC/MF/AK/1)

In addition, in the MTC, the nearly synonymous phrase: CHANGE* COURSE occurs 74 times and, as with ALTER* COURSE, the use is formulaic, particularly with regard to the noun phrase CHANGE OF COURSE which occurs 26 times and always in the context of navigation.

- 6 we had a clockwork timing device which could be set to ring a bell whenever a change of course was required. (MTC/WT/21)

⁵² It is possible that the expression alter courses would have been used, meaning adjust or trim the sails, there are, however, no instances of this in the MTC data.

In the BNC, CHANGE* COURSE (in a directional sense) occurs 104 times, of which 14 are specifically maritime applications and another three are aeronautical. The fixed noun phrase CHANGE OF COURSE occurs 15 times but is always figurative e.g.:

- 7 There had been few expectations that the Chancellor would announce a significant change of course, but disappointment that Mr Lawson said nothing new on monetary policy sent sterling 0.50 pfennigs lower to close at DM2.9562. (BNC/ A5W)

In addition there are 34 occurrences of another fixed phrase, CHANGE THE COURSE OF (X). (See App. 2.32: fig.180). These fixed phrases generally refer to abstract progressive events e.g.:

History (x11)

- 8 it is a myth, true in principle, perhaps in literal fact, of how a group of women changed the course of history. (BNC/CCN)

My life (x3)

- 9 some woman came round - she may have been the hospital social worker or an almoner - and spent about an hour telling me how this was going to completely change the course of my life. (BNC/CRS)

A/The game (x4)

- 10 AN ERROR by Arwel Parry eight minutes into the second half which allowed Wayne Proctor, the Llanelli left wing, to score the first try, changed the course of the game. (BNC/AHK)

The war (x3).

- 11 They used all our rockets.
We couldn't fire them in 1945 because we ran out of fuel.
Because the idiots in Berlin cut off our supply.
We could have changed the course of the war. (BNC/GOI)

In the BNC data, ALTER* + COURSE occurs 46 times. There are 22 'literal' uses of the expression, including five maritime lines, five from the field of aviation and another 12 lines referring to physical human travel or to geographical features such as rivers and roads. The remaining 24 lines are figurative:

- 12 On returning to England he served as a staff captain in the War Office and then as an assistant secretary to the Committee of Imperial Defence, an appointment which was to alter completely the course of his career.
(BNC/GT0)
- 13 Such unity as they had, however, arose more from the situation in the prisons than from any systematic or co-ordinated plan to alter the course of a penal policy that was increasingly being called into question.
(BNC/EEC)
- 14 With the inability of stable monetary and/or fiscal policy to alter the real course of the economy, it is the determinants of the 'natural rates' that are the source of concern (BNC/HWH)

These figurative uses are generally concerned with progressive events i.e. history or phenomena that exist over time e.g. career (12), or are about abstract legislative ideas: penal policy (13) or large scale abstractions, the economy (14) that are frequently expressed in terms of MCMs.

There is no evidence of exploitation of maritime resonances in any of these figurative instances in the BNC, and while the maritime origins of the expression are clear, and a good case can be made for their exploitation of the underlying MCMs, the absence of maritime resonances, as well as their restricted form suggests that these expressions are fully idiomatified and the maritime and non-maritime uses are homonymous. As pointed out by Lakoff and Johnson, it is in idiomatified language that conceptual metaphors are often best revealed; the key MCMs here are:

TIME = SEA/RIVER, POLITICS = SEA, ECONOMY = SEA, ORGANISATION = SHIP, ENTERPRISE = SHIP, LIFE = VOYAGE.

5.7.11 ALL HANDS ON DECK

MTC: N=17

BNC: N=13

Appendix 2.26.1.3

The OED made a draft addition to the entry for Hand. n, in 2007 to describe the adoption of this and the associated expression ALL HANDS TO THE PUMPS into the general discourse as figurative expressions:

Hands, n

Draft additions June 2007

Uses of the nautical sense of all hands in figurative and allusive phrases, as all hands on deck, all hands to the pumps (also pump), indicating (the need for) intense or urgent activity or effort by a large number of people, or by all the people who are available, esp. in an emergency.

The ODP gives both the maritime definition:

a cry or signal used on board ship, typically in an emergency, to indicate that all crew members are to go on deck.

and the figurative use:

used to indicate that the involvement of all members of a team is required

Whereas the MMD gives only the figurative use:

used for saying that everyone must help because there is an emergency

Smyth does not cite the precise ME, although it is alluded to in his description of ALL HANDS AHOY:

All hands, the whole ship's company.-- All hands ahoy, the boatswain's summons for the whole crew to repair on deck, in distinction from the watch
(1867:30)

In the MTC, the ME occurs 10 times in this precise form and is highly specialised, usually being used in a sequence of orders;

- 1 Then the mate's voice sang down the hatch, 'All hands on deck and make sail!' (MTC/ HF/JL/BLU)
- 2 Then, 'Larboard watch, ahoy! all hands on deck and turn out reefs,' was the cry.(MTC/ HNF/JS/LIB)
- 3 Captain Tennant's voice is coming over the ship's loudspeaker, a cool voice: 'All hands on deck. Prepare to abandon ship' (MTC/WT/CB/R)

The format is fixed: the definite article is never used and the preposition is always ON; in the MTC, 'men' are never called 'to the' deck.

In the BNC (see App.2.26.1.3: Figs 146-148 for all concordance lines), there is some variation in form, with three examples of all hands to the decks, (texts 4, 7 and 8, below). In metaphorical use it frequently occurs as a predicative complement; the metaphoricity of the expression being marked by the use of It (be)* in all but one the texts (Text 6):

- 4 Voice over
It's been all hands to the deck at this tyre fitters.
With the New Year legislation, many drivers have have been making a New Year resolution to steer clear of trouble. (BNC/K1B)
- 5 Now, with half an hour's grace to freshen up, it's all hands on deck at the hotel, in Mephistco's corporate hospitality suite. (BNC/HGN)
- 6 But Steve Lunn's superb solo effort four minutes from time, the best goal of the match, brought Shilton out of his dugout for the first time to summon all hands on deck. (BNC/CEP)
- 7 Now it's all hands to the deck for the close friends as they knuckle down to bring back the sparkle that has been missing down at Hamilton Park for the past few seasons.(BNC/K2D)

SAILING

- 8 Voice over
The Laser single-handers are enough to send you in a spin.
Round and round for hours and hours.
When it's all hands to the deck in these craft, 2 often isn't enough!
(BNC/K1W)

- 9 Whether for an hour or even a full day, once you step on board it's all hands on deck as crew members don their lifejackets and take to the seas in the adventure of a lifetime. (BNC/K2U)
- 10 Voice over
It was all hands on deck as the crew of the Soren Larsen, prepared to lift the first part of the ship's 100ft foremast back into place. (BNC/K1G)

Three of the citations, 8-10, come from news reports on sailing events, however, this marking is still used to show that these are figurative rather than a literal uses of the term. In 8 and 9 the expression appears to be used as a resonator rather than in any literal sense, to mark the maritime nature of the report. One other text also exploits maritime resonances; here too the phrase is used as a resonator to complement Royal Navy rather than having any real semantic content:

- 11 It's all hands on deck for the most exciting show in London as the Royal Navy introduces this year's action packed Royal Tournament at Earl's Court. (BNC/HP4)

ALL HANDS ON DECK qualifies as a genuine ME because of its original use at sea, as evidenced in the MTC data, however its modern use, in the general discourse, has become fixed in the form IT'S* ALL HANDS ON DECK and, despite its apparent transparency, has been idiomatified or, particularly in maritime contexts, has become effectively de-lexicalised and is used purely as a resonator.

5.7.12 ALL HANDS TO THE PUMPS

MTC: N=2

BNC: N=7

Appendix 2.26.1.4 (See also 5.4.20, and 5.7.5.)

The data suggests that the expression ALL HANDS TO THE PUMPS is a twentieth century invention rather than a genuine ME. The OED (Draft additions, June 2007) describes this as a purely figurative extension of ALL HANDS.

'Uses of the nautical sense of all hands (see sense 8b) in figurative and allusive phrases, as all hands on deck, all hands to the pumps (also pump), indicating (the need for) intense or urgent activity or effort by a large number of people, or by all the people who are available, esp. in an emergency.'

With the earliest citation being given from 1920, where it is used in a report on parliamentary proceedings in the Times newspaper.

quality management training, geared much more towards how we plan the business to grow over the next five to ten years than it is to simply manning the pumps. (BNC/HX3)

In the BNC, all the occurrences of ALL HANDS TO THE PUMPS are figurative. The form is generally fixed:

- 9 Cos we need to cos we need to sort of all hands to the pump next week cos we've got a big change-over (BNC/JN6)
- 10 Keegan said: 'It's all hands to the pump now and that crowd will help keep us up. (BNC/K4T)
- 11 'Take your orders from Betty - I always do,' he said, eyes dancing.
'The party is for the day after tomorrow - that's why it's all hands to the pumps.'
(BNC/JY8)

Texts 9 to 11 are purely idiomatic; there is no hint of exploitation of maritime resonances and the form is fixed, particularly in texts 10 and 11, the expression is in the form of a predicative complement with 'It's':

- 12 Sam was put in charge of us, for Dad and Carl were at work.
A shiny sixpence was his fee.
That money was never shared.
After tea was eaten (or drunk) he issued orders.
None of us would dare disobey.
'All hands to the job.'
Pails, hot-water, soap, dusters, brushes; a task for all of us - except himself.
He was the 'gaffer', the foreman, the boss. (BNC/BN3)
- 13 Instead of turning back or taking the upper channel, a long cul-de-sac ending at a floodgate, Dennis beached the punt on the rollers forming a portage over the weir.
'All hands to the ropes!' he shouted merrily.
'Look lively, ye lubbers!' (BNC/BMR)

Texts 12 and 13, are variants: ALL HANDS can be seen as a transferred usage from maritime to general use, rather than as a metaphorical extension in meaning; the 'job' in text 12 and the 'ropes' in text 13 are literal entities. However, in text 12, the expression ALL HANDS carries maritime resonances through the deliberate demarcation of the roles of 'captain' and 'crew'. While, in text 13, the expression is used primarily for stylistic effect, alongside a powerful maritime resonator, look lively, ye lubbers!, suggesting that the metaphorical sense of the expression is being actively exploited. The fixed form ALL HANDS TO THE PUMPS, appears to be fully idiomatised, while the variant forms remain as active conventional metaphors.

The ALL HANDS group express the MCMs of ENDEAVOUR / ORGANISATION = SHIP.

5.7.13 BEAM-ENDS

MTC; N = 66

BNC: N = 3

Appendix 2.3.1

The OED entry for BEAM has not been updated since the First Edition (1887), where BEAM-ENDS is defined as:

18 'the ends of a ship's beams. to be, or be laid, on the beam-ends : to have them touching the water, so that the vessel lies on its side in imminent danger of capsizing; fig. to be quite laid aside, utterly at a loss, hard up.'

It gives citations for this expression dating from 1773, with the most recent maritime example coming from Marryat (1833) and a figurative use from Dickens (1844).

THE ODP gives two differentiated definitions; one maritime and one figurative:

1 On one's beam ends: near the end of one's resources; desperate.

2 On her beam ends: (of a ship) heeled over on its side; almost capsized.

The MMD gives simply:

To be on your beam ends: to have very little money

Partridge gives the figurative use of BEAM ENDS as Beam Ends. The buttocks: early naval: early C.19. Bill Truck, Sept. 1823.-2. In on (one's) beam ends, utterly exhausted: nautical very early C19. – 3. In on one's beam ends, in a difficulty (Dickens, 1844; short of money: Coll. Senses 2 and 3 ex a vessel in imminent danger of capsizing. (2002:59)

Smyth gives both literal/technical and figurative interpretations of the expression, although his figurative interpretation is slightly at variance with the OED and the ODP:

Hence also a person lying down is metaphorically said to be on his beam-ends.
(1867:89)

This interpretation is somewhat less metaphorical than the generally accepted figurative use, in that the salient features of both source and target are more closely matched here, with the expression merely describing the physical rather than the moral or financial position of the subject (Hanks, 2006:20). By 1867, both figurative and literal senses of the expression seem to be well established according to the OED and MTC data; this particular interpretation may be, therefore, somewhat idiosyncratic on Smyth's part.

In the MTC, the most recent literal/ technical example comes from MacFadyen (2011).

- 1 On the second day out we struck a full gale which reduced us to eight knots and laid the old girl on her beam ends. (MTC/ L/DM/MAC)

All but three of the occurrences in the MTC are technical/literal uses

- 2 'I'm glad to see you up again, youngster,' said Jolliffe; 'you've been on your beam ends longer than usual, but those who are strongest suffer most (MTC/ HF/FM/4) (Marryat, 1846).
- 3 'No; but I believe my arm's broken, and I have a pistol ball between my ribs.'
'Why, I know that voice. Yes--no--damn me--it must be Ralph Rattlin—it bean't, sure--and here on his beam ends, a shot in his hull, and one of his spars shattered. I'd sooner have had my grog watered all my life than this should have fallen out.' (MTC/ HF/HM/REE) (Marryat 1838)
- 4 Thrown on their beam ends, they were presently planning something else, eager to shake dice with destiny and with courage unbroken.
(MTC/ HNF/AB/ALA) (Paine 1919)

In the BNC, BEAM ENDS appears only three times, two occurrences being literal, maritime uses and the third being figurative:

- 5 If they were on their beam-ends the really desperate might brave an audition with the dreaded Sherman Fisher. (BNC/B34)

It is impossible, with the small amount of corpus evidence available in the BNC, to ascertain whether, when used metaphorically, BEAM ENDS still carries any maritime resonances; The entries in the ODP and MMD imply that the maritime and figurative uses are now homonymous and although the literal maritime term is still in use, the figurative use is now idiomatic, with no evidence of maritime resonances being exploited.

MCMs include PERSON = SHIP, LIFE = VOYAGE; FINANCE = SEA

5.7.14 BROAD BEAMED/ BROAD IN THE BEAM⁵³

MTC: N=14

BNC; N=3

Appendix 2.3.2

The OED definition (not revised since the first edition, 1887) of BEAM gives:

One of the horizontal transverse timbers, stretching from side to side of a ship, supporting the deck, and holding the vessel together ,... Hence, The greatest breadth of a ship,

The earliest citation comes from 1627, while the earliest citation given for its figurative use is from 1929:

transf. The (width of the) hips or buttocks; esp. in colloq. phr. broad in the beam, Smyth has no specific entry for the expression, although he uses it in describing certain types of craft.

DUNGIYAH. A broad-beamed flat-bottomed Arabian coaster trading between the Red Sea, Gulf of Persia, and the Malabar coast. (1867:268)

KOROCORA. A broad-beamed Molucca vessel, with high stem and stern, and an out-rigger. It is common among the Malay islands. (ibid:426)

Partridge gives it as a nineteenth to twentieth century expression:

broad in the beam. (of a person) broad-seated (2005:138).

The ODP defines the phrase as:

(of a person) fat around the hips

There is no entry in the MMD.

In MTC, it occurs, with some variation in form, eight times as a technical description e.g. :

- 1 The Sparrow was one hundred and ten feet long on that deck, but had a broad beam of thirty feet, almost that of a frigate. (MTC/ MF/AK/2)
- 2 The schooner was a beautiful model, very broad in the beam, and very low in the water. (MTC/ HF/FM/6)

Only one of the texts uses the expression figuratively:

⁵³ The expression BROAD ON THE BEAM, despite its similarity of form, is a completely separate expression, describing the positions of vessels or objects relative to each other or the wind direction. It occurs six times in the MTC. This is a purely technical ME, not found in the BNC and not used figuratively in the MTC data.

- 3 Whether he thought it sailor-like, or whether his tailor was afraid of putting his lordship to short allowance of cloth, for fear of phlogistic consequences, I know not; but broad as was the beam of his lordship, still broader and more ample in proportion were the folds of this essential part of his drapery, quite enough to have embraced twice the volume of human flesh contained within them, large as it undoubtedly was.
(MTC/ HF/FM/1) (Marryat, 1829).

This figurative use predates the OED citation by 100 years.

In the BNC, the expression occurs just three times, two being maritime, technical descriptions:

- 4 The Perth retained a number of features familiar to the Iris, but differed in having a hull shallower and less broad in the beam, this hull being covered by corrosion-resistant Alclad. (BNC/CGJ)
- 5 Variations of a kind of carrack - a two-masted galleon, round-bottomed and broad-beamed, with lateen sails and elementary steering gear.
(BNC/G17)

And the third being figurative

- 6 Its bulk, however, was a problem, which might make vertical ironing a little impractical. A broad-beamed fellow like myself should have no difficulty careering it across the ironing board, although a woman or even a bachelor-wimp might sooner resort to an old-fashioned metal iron.
(BNC/AHC)

The corpus evidence in the BNC is very limited, so that it is impossible to come to any safe conclusions about metaphorical resonances, based on collocational data. However, there is no evidence of maritime resonances being exploited in the figurative uses of the expression, either in the BNC, or, despite the maritime context of the piece overall, the line from Marryat in the MTC, or indeed in the citations used in the OED (See appendix 2.3.2), suggesting that, to modern users outside the maritime discourse community, this is probably an idiomatic expression.

5.7.15 GO OVERBOARD

MTC: N=61

BNC: N=55

Appendix 2.4.8.1

The OED citations for GO OVERBOARD date from only 1931 and show the expression as purely figurative.

'b. Excessively, beyond one's means. Chiefly in to go overboard: to behave immoderately; to go too far; to display excessive enthusiasm.'

The ODP just gives:

Go Overboard

1. be very enthusiastic
2. react in an immoderate way

And the MMD

INFORMAL

to do or say more than is reasonable or necessary, for example because you are excited or angry

Smyth's definitions do not include the specific expression GO OVERBOARD.

In the MTC data, there are 61 instances of GO OVERBOARD, all with a literal meaning of fall off a ship, coming from texts ranging from the eighteenth to the twentieth century.

- 1 Next morning, when the hour of visitation came round, the unhappy young man was missing, and, after strict search, supposed to have gone overboard in the night; and this was certainly the case.
(MTC/HF/TS/1) – (Smollett 1748)
- 2 He narrated: 'I just saw his head bobbing, and I dashed my boat-hook in the water. It caught in his breeches and I nearly went overboard, as I thought I would, only old Symons let go the tiller and grabbed my legs-- the boat nearly swamped. (MTC/HF/JC/2) (Conrad, 1917)

The BNC data provides 55 examples of the ME, including 13 instances where the expression is used in its original, literal maritime sense, e.g.:

- 3 Luke Rowe broke the news to him. 'We lost him,' he said bluntly. 'He went overboard off the Gribbin.' 'Overboard... What d'you mean -?' 'Fell overboard,' Rowe explained. (BNC/EWH)

The remaining occurrences are all figurative, e.g.:

- 4 You are demonstrating to them how to recognize, name and communicate their feelings without going overboard. Psychologists refer to these statements about one's own feelings as 'I' messages. (BNC/B10)
- 5 But Hugh Dykes, MP for Harrow East, said: 'I hope politicians will not go overboard and seek to bring in tough laws to curb the press. (BNC/CH2)

The BNC data contains only one line where the expression is clearly exploiting maritime resonances

- 6 Japanese manufacturer of computerised fishing equipment. In the past ten years, Japanese people have gone overboard for squid, consuming half a million tonnes annually. (BNC/B73)

This suggests that the original maritime resonances are all but lost to modern writers outside the maritime domain. The fact that the ALDs now give the figurative meaning as the primary definition suggests that GO OVERBOARD has become idiomatic. The maritime and figurative meanings existing now as homonyms, despite the apparent transparency of the expression and its currency as a literal expression in maritime contexts.

5.8 Resonators

Although these are figurative expressions, they are not primarily used as metaphors, that is, with a specific secondary meaning, but rather to evoke or reinforce a maritime theme for stylistic effect. Such expressions may be genuine MEs, that is, expressions that the MTC and dictionary sources can confirm as having been used by mariners in their discourse, but many are corruptions of maritime language or literary inventions. They often appear as clichéd expressions and are therefore classed here as a form of idiomatic expression, although note that whereas idioms are regarded in this study as expressions with a primary meaning that no longer reflects maritime roots, resonators are selected specifically for their maritime resonances. Resonators, as with other idiomatic forms are often delexicalised:

This is the process through which a lexical item loses at least some of its original lexical value and often acquires other meanings and functions within a larger unit. (Tognini-Bonelli, 2001:116)

It is also true to say that whether an ME is classified as a resonator or not depends wholly on the context it is used in, so that, for instance, AHOY (below) may carry its full meaning as a naval hail in one text, be used in a transferred sense in another and be used purely as a resonator in another.

A number of expressions that occasionally fall into this category have already been described under other headings, including:

BOATS AWAY (5.6.13)

FULL STEAM AHEAD (5.6.14)

ALL HANDS ON DECK (0)

ALL HANDS TO THE PUMPS (5.7.12)

These are conventionalised metaphors or idiomatic expressions that are also often chosen, particularly in reportage, specifically for their maritime resonances, to emphasise or introduce a maritime theme. When used in these circumstances, they are also therefore regarded as resonators.

Four expressions are detailed below that are now used almost exclusively as maritime resonators in the general discourse.

5.8.1 AHOY

MTC: N=102; F=11.67

BNC: N=26; F= 0.3

K=361

Appendix 2.24

The OED cites instances from 1748 to the present day and defines AHOY as:

‘orig. and chiefly Naut. Now arch. or humorous.

1. A shout or exclamation used to hail, greet, or attract attention to someone or something, esp. from a distance (originally at sea). Also ahoy there!

2. ‘With preceding noun specifying the thing being hailed or the object of attention. Freq. in land ahoy!, ship ahoy!, and now often in extended jocular use.’

The MMD gives a purely nautical definition as:

used by sailors for calling to people or other ships;

While the ODP has:

Exclamation, nautical or humorous: a call used in hailing

Smyth (1867) merely gives

‘AHOY: An exclamation derived from our Danish ancestors, and literally meaning Stop! (1867:383).

Despite its keyness, it is not a high frequency item in the MTC. All instances are literal; that is, they are used as genuine hails at sea, rather than ironically or figuratively.

In the BNC there are 26 occurrences in total (Appendix 2.24). While the structure remains the same as in the MTC, usually NP + AHOY, only six lines can be classified (somewhat loosely in some cases) as maritime; ten have been used in news or advertising article headings or titles, five of which might be described as being maritime related, e.g.

1 Sail Ahoy
Alan Major concentrates on the closely related sailfish and swordfish families. (BNC/ARE)

2 Ahoy price
A BULLET-proof yacht built for deposed East German dictator Erich Honecker is up for sale in Copenhagen, Denmark, at £1,250,000. (BNC/CH2)

Others, however, seem to have no logical maritime connection. Many of these come from the music press:

3 More domestic bliss ahoy.

Many congratulations to LLOYD COLE who became a father for the first time when his wife recently gave birth to a baby boy Billy, in New York.
(BNC/CK4)

Some exploit extended maritime metaphors:

- 4 'Yo ho ho...98 whores in a horse's head...give me the moonlight...and a tower of power...mumbo jumbo...hocus pocus...look, I've only got seven items...ahoy there...avast there me hearties...what do you mean, this is the post office...?' (BNC/G3C) in (4) There is nothing in the co-text of the article overall to justify, or explain the relevance of this passage to the subject matter, it appears to be purely a device for making a maritime/ piratical connection, however tenuous. The passage is made up of a number of maritime resonators: YO HO HO, AHOY THERE, AVAST ME HEARTIES, interspersed with random song titles; note also the pattern of 98 WHORES IN HORSES HEAD which parodies the pirate song 15 men on a dead man's chest taken from R.L. Stevenson's Treasure Island (Stevenson, 1883), which can, therefore, also be regarded in this context as a maritime resonator.

AHOY's main use is now as a resonator, except on the increasingly rare occasions where it is used literally in a genuine maritime context.

5.8.2 AVAST

MTC: N=65; F= 7.4

BNC: N=2; F=0

K=285

Appendix 2.49

The earliest citation in the OED (original 1885 edition) is from 1681 and the most recent, 1836; it is defined as 'Naut. Hold! Stop! Stay! Cease!', and to be derived from the Dutch hou'vast, houdvast meaning 'hold fast' and with a nominal form houvast meaning 'cramp iron'. However, Smyth, (1867:62), suggests instead that:

'its derivation from the Italian 'basta' is more plausible than have fast.'

In the MTC, there are 65 instances of AVAST from 20 different texts, reflecting the technical use of the term as an order meaning 'cease work', or 'stop immediately'.

- 1 'Avast heaving there on that stay-tackle. Belay!' (MTC/MF/CSF/1)

- 2 I heard them, at the very time that a crashing broadside was poured in by the corvette, cry out, 'Avast firing for a moment and clear the decks.'
(MTC/HF/FM/11)
- 3 'In heaven's name, man,' cried Stubb, 'are you ramming home a cartridge there?--Avast! How will that help him; jamming that iron-bound bucket on top of his head? Avast, will ye!' (MTC/HF/HM/2)

The expression occurs 20 times in Melville's Moby Dick (1851), as well as ten times in Smollett's works (1748, 1751); two writers who have provided strong stereotypes for sailors and their language in popular culture. AVAST does not appear in any of the 20th century texts in the MTC, suggesting that it is now obsolete, so that its only uses are in historical novels or modern pastiches. In the BNC, there are only two examples:

- 4 'Yo ho ho...98 whores in horse's head...give me the moonlight...and a tower of power...mumbo jumbo...hocus pocus...look, I've only got seven items...ahoy there...avast there me hearties...what do you mean, this is the post office...? (BNC/HWX)
- 5 Looking down, she saw an oilcloth suit and rough hands.
She felt a wire wool of beard on her chin, and realised she was seeing the world two-dimensionally.
There was a patch over one eye.
One of her legs ended in a carved wooden peg.
Something squawked and bit her ear, then flapped demonically off her shoulder.
As if by instinct, she took the wheel and wrestled the ship under control.
'Avast, ye swabs,' she shouted, astonished by the hoarseness of her voice, 'belay yeselves an' man the mizzen-mast. 'TIS a stormy course for Far Tortuga we're sailin' an' the cap'n'll not rest easy at the bottom of the sea 'til the treasure be ours!' (BNC/GVL)

In both 4 and 5, the expression is part of a clichéd piratical rant in a pastiche, rather than being representative of genuine speech, suggesting that it is now only used ironically in modern texts; the expression has been delexicalised; it carries no semantic meaning other than 'this is nautical sailor-talk'. In these texts it is therefore classified as a resonator.

5.8.3 AYE AYE (SIR)!

MTC: N=1881;F=215

BNC: N=5131; F= 52

K=1144

Appendix 2.54

The OED (1st Ed. 1885) says of AYE AYE: 'Appears suddenly about 1575, and is exceedingly common about 1600; origin unknown.' And defines it as:

A. int. (and adv.) 1. As an affirmative response to a question: Yes; even so. Common dialectally, and in nautical language; the formal word used in voting 'yes' in the House of Commons; but not used for 'yes' in modern educated speech or writing, except as an archaism.

Two specifically maritime citations are given:

1858 H. W. Longfellow Miles Standish iv. 33 The shouts of the mate, and the sailors' 'Ay, ay, Sir!'
1878 Masque of Poets 53 The mate sprang forward and cried 'Aye, Aye!'

The ODP also defines it as:

nautical a response accepting an order

While the MMD gives simply:

Aye: a word used for saying 'yes' in some parts of the UK, especially Scotland

Smyth gives:

AYE, AYE, SIR. A prompt reply on receiving an order. Also the answer on comprehending an order. 'Aye-aye' the answer to a sentinel's hail, from a boat which has a commissioned officer on board below the rank of captain
(1867: 64)

Smyth's definition highlights the formulaic nature of this expression, which is strongly born out by the MTC data. The concordance data, as well as the OED⁵⁴, show that these two keywords are alternate spellings for the same expression, and the analysis proceeds on this basis. Note that that the spelling AY AY is predominantly used in the older historical texts, whereas AYE AYE is found almost exclusively in the modern fiction texts, especially in the writing of Forester, Fullerton, O'Brien, Pope and Woodman, although Smyth also uses this spelling.

⁵⁴ The OED also remarks: 'Spelt both aye and ay : the former is in accordance with parliamentary usage, and better on every ground'

In the MTC, AYE AYE occurs 528 times, with the top collocate being sir, or vernacular forms of it such as sor and zur.

- 1 Mortimer gave in. 'All right. Send him along, right away.'
'Aye aye, sir.' The captain went below. (BNC/MF/AF/1)
- 2 'Mast-head ahoy! Do you see that whale now?'
'Ay ay, sir! A shoal of Sperm Whales! There she blows! There she breaches!'
'Sing out! sing out every time!'
'Ay Ay, sir! There she blows! there--there--thar she blows
(MTC/HF/HM/2)

Note also that AY(E), as a single word, is strongly represented in vernacular speech in both corpora, as a form of assent or agreement⁵⁵.

In the BNC, AYE is overwhelmingly used as an affirmative, or an interjection in vernacular conversation, particularly in Scots or northern dialects. The expression is very frequently doubled or even tripled in these instances. Out of 5,144 concordance lines, there are just eight that use the expression as an ME, as found in the MTC, as a response to an order, and in every case the use is ironic and far removed from any maritime context.

- 3 'Don't even know what they'd talk about; a member of the factory-owning Scottish gentry and a second mate - or whatever Lachy is these days - who's spent the last few years in Oz.
What is there to say; aye-aye, captain of light industry?' (BNC/G0A)
- 4 'My workshop would be more convenient,' she declared, and hastily fashioned an excuse.
'I was in the middle of painting a tile and I'd like to finish it before it dries. It's this way,' she said, and, swivelling on her heel, she marched smartly back across the drive.
'Aye, aye, Captain.' Vitor d'Arcos murmured, behind her. (BNC/JY9)
- 5 'I'll meet you in the park, you know the gate at the top of Gloucester Road, that's about equal for both of us.
We'll hang about or something...my mother's out, I'll leave her a note.'
'Aye, aye, Captain.' said Maggie, 'so's mine.' (BNC/A6J)
- 6 This is a matter for the police, now.'
'Aye aye, sir.' said Bodie glumly, watching as Cowley moved off towards his limousine. (BNC/CE5)

⁵⁵ There is some difference in the use of AY and AYE in the MTC, in that the AY spelling occurs frequently in a number of the shanties, often as a part-word in the chorus and this accounts, at least in part, for the high frequency of the item e.g.

Old Storm Along is dead and gone.
Ay ! ay ! ay ! Mr. Storm Along. (MTC/SS/165)

The original maritime use of AYE AYE, SIR, as an acknowledgement of an order, remains unchanged in the BNC data, however, it becomes an ironic response to someone being over-officious or assuming unjustified authority.

The use of AYE, AYE, outside the maritime discourse, exploits maritime resonances of the sailor's vernacular and naval discipline to express an ironic response to overstepped authority and is thus classified here as a resonator.

5.8.4 HEAVE / HAUL AWAY

	MTC	BNC
HEAVE AWAY	N=125;	N=2
HAUL AWAY	N=122	N=5

Appendix 2.51.3

These two expressions, HEAVE AWAY and HAUL AWAY account for 624 collocations in the MTC and HEAVE and HAUL are the top collocates of AWAY in the MTC (See App.2.50: Tables 56 & 57) and are very specifically maritime. Although often considered to be interchangeable by modern speakers, to sailors they have distinct meanings. Sailors HAUL on ropes and HEAVE on levers such as capstan bars and pumps. The phrases feature widely, not only in dialogues and the issuing of instructions, but also with great regularity in sea shanties, where the sole function of the song is to provide the rhythm for the work of heaving and hauling to be carried out:

- 1 Heave Away
 Come get your duds in order
 For we're going to leave tomorrow
Heave away, me jollies, heave away
 Come get your duds in order
 For we're going to cross the water
Heave away me jolly boys, we're all bound away (MTC/ SS/033)
- 2 Haul away, haul away
 They brush their hair with codfish bones
 And we're bound away for Australia
 So heave away, me bully, bully boys
Haul away, haul away
Heave her up and don't you make a noise
 And we're bound away for Australia (MTC/SS/018)

Each shanty would have many verses and the choruses are highly repetitive, so these songs account for a very high percentage of the concordances.

HEAVE and HAUL also occur frequently in utterances and order sequences in both fiction and non-fiction texts in the MTC:

- 3 'How many fathoms have you out? pass along the deep-sea line!' 'Ay, ay, Sir.' 'Come are you all ready?' 'All ready, Sir.' 'Heave away, watch! watch! bear away, veer away, no ground Sir, with a hundred fathom.
(MTC/HF/XX/PIR)

HAUL AWAY may also refer to the specific movement of a ship working close to the wind.

- 4 'When we're far enough ahead we'll haul away to port and aim for a spot out there somewhere.' (MTC/MF/AF/1)

In the BNC, HEAVE AWAY occurs only twice: text 5 (below) is from a poem about youth and is part of an extended maritime metaphor; text 6 is from a maritime text and used with its original, maritime meaning:

- 5 Iambic youth, you put your oar in everywhere and heave away, mostly shipping water;
you've left out nothing but what you need, (BNC/HNP)
- 6 Two shire horses and 12 cursing, sweating men coaxed the six-ton pump forward towards the quay.
The foreman paused to wipe his forehead with the back of a hairy arm.
'Heave away there me boys!' he gasped.
'PULL, Jacko.
Pull boys...
HEAVE!' (BNC/ALL)

Of the five instances of HAUL AWAY, two are in genuine maritime contexts and one is part of a pastiche from a play, Rosencrantz and Guildenstern are Dead (Stoppard, 1986):

- 7 GUIL: Well, that's cleared that up.
(Longer pause: the sound builds a little and identifies itself - the sea.
Ship timbers, wind in the rigging, and then shouts of sailors calling obscure but inescapably nautical instructions from all directions, far and near: A short list: Hard a larboard!
Let go the stays!
Reef down me hearties!
Is that you, cox'n?
Hel-llo!
Is that you?
Hard a port!
Easy as she goes!
Keep her steady on the lee!
Haul away, lads!
SNATCHES OF SEA SHANTY MAYBE Fly the jib!
Tops'l up, me maties!)
(When the point has been well made and more so.)
(BNC/FU6.txt)

Stoppard states clearly in the stage directions (underlined) that, in this instance, all these expressions, including HAUL AWAY, are used purely for effect, and therefore as resonators.

6 Discussion

This study is about the analysis of MEs extracted from the MTC, a purpose-built corpus of maritime texts, and the BNC reference corpus. Using WordSmith Tools, a list of keywords of statistical significance, based on log-likelihood, within the maritime discourse were identified and subsequently analysed in terms of their change of use from specialised technical maritime usage to figurative uses in the general discourse. The analysis has focussed particularly on the role of such expressions in the general discourse as both linguistic and conceptual metaphors.

The Research Questions originally posed were:

1. From a corpus of maritime texts, how may maritime expressions be identified automatically and categorised lexically?
2. Of those maritime expressions that have become metaphorised, what model of metaphorisation may account for that process, and how may the identified metaphorised maritime expressions be classified within it?
3. From those maritime expressions that have become metaphorised, what general conclusions may be drawn?

In this chapter, I discuss the key findings of the study as they relate to those research questions. 6.1 addresses the points raised by Research Question 1 with regard to the identification and classification of MEs. 6.2 addresses the findings in relation to Research Question 2. It discusses the metaphorical model used in the analysis and discusses in detail the resultant classifications of metaphorised MEs. 6.3 addresses Research Question 3 and discusses the MEs and MCMs that have been revealed and their cultural significance and the role of register and domain in influencing which MEs and MCMs are most prevalent in a particular discourse.

In 6.4, I discuss the effectiveness of the methodology and look at the limitations of the study and issues of representativeness and balance, before moving on to assess the practical implications and applications of the study in 6.5, which also considers further research that might build on this work, as well as considering other occupational discourses that might provide specific conceptual metaphors that influence the English language and ideas of cultural identity.

6.1 RQ 1: Identifying and classifying MEs

From the MTC, a purpose-built corpus of maritime texts, 61 'keywords' commencing with the letter 'A' were identified as potentially significant MEs within the maritime and the general discourse, using the log likelihood algorithm provided by WordSmith Tools and using the BNC as a reference corpus. The list was then 'cleaned' to remove proper nouns, non-words and non-maritime-specific keywords, and used to identify potential MEs, that is, single and multi-word units of meaning with specific and specialised meanings within the maritime discourse, that have subsequently been adopted in to the general discourse. From the keyword list, a total of 81 potential MEs were identified as being worthy of further investigation, of these 62 expressions were found to be actual MEs, with 13 'Non-MEs' being shown to be 'key' within the discourse but not specifically maritime in origin or usage (See Table 36, below).

The corpus approach allows for a detailed analysis of usage and collocations, providing many hundreds of examples of particular expressions for analysis; for example, ABOARD (5.6.4) occurs 160 times in the MTC and thus provides 160 instances for analysis of contextual and collocational data, illustrating both literal/technical and metaphorical uses within the maritime discourse and especially of the process of change from technical to figurative use that is the focus of this study.

Additional information on etymology, definitions and current usage was obtained through the OED and various Advanced Learner's Dictionaries. A key reference work on original maritime usage was Smyth's Sailor's Word-book, containing 'over 14,000 nautical and naval terms' (1867:frontispiece). While it can be argued that Smyth has already provided what might be regarded as a definitive list of MEs, the keyword list is built from a wide range of maritime text types including private journals and letters, journalism, modern and historical maritime fiction and modern web texts. It thus represents a broader period of writing, extending from eighteenth century texts, such as the Barrington collection of letters of 1746 and Tobias Smollett's novels, dating from 1748, to present day texts in the form of Weblogs, such as 'The Two Eddies' (2011)⁵⁶. It is thus possible to find MEs being used in modern maritime contexts, as well as in the historical contexts used by Smyth and to see changes in form and use and, in particular, the transfer of MEs from maritime use into the new domains of aviation, sport, including motor racing, and computing, in expressions such as ABEAM (5.5.4) and LINE ASTERN (5.5.2) and ANCHOR (5.6.1) that Smyth could not write about.

⁵⁶ See Appendices A1-2 and A1-3 for details of texts

Furthermore, even in within the maritime domain, although Smyth's book was published when steam ships were already well established⁵⁷, the actual tonnage of steamships did not exceed that of sailing ships until the 1880s and only in 1868, one year after Smyth's book was published, did the construction of iron steamships equal the construction of wooden sailing ships, (Friel, 2003:225-226), so that very little space is given by Smyth to words and phrases pertaining to steam vessels. The keyword list reveals a number of MEs such as ACTION STATIONS (0), and engine room commands such as FULL AHEAD, FULL ASTERN and derivations from them, such as FULL STEAM AHEAD (5.6.14) that are not featured in Smyth.

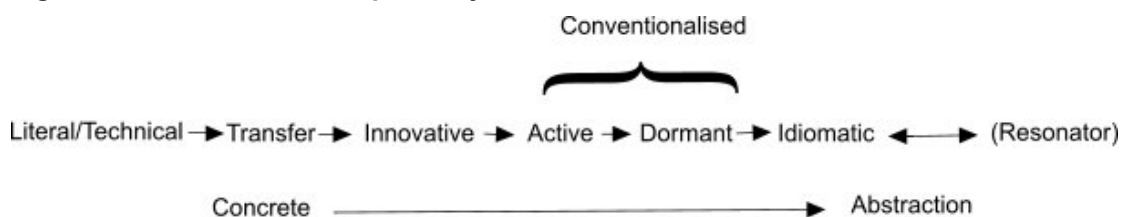

Within the analysis in Chapter 5, there is a detailed description of every ME identified, along with variants that would not have been found without the corpus data.

6.2 RQ2: The metaphorical model and classification of MEs.

In order to classify these MEs, a model of metaphorisation was developed that describes how they are being used in their original (source) domains and in their new (target) domains. To measure the shift in meaning from literal to metaphorised expression it was necessary to establish the original 'key meanings' of particular usages; these key meanings could then be related to the 'salient features' (Hanks, 2006:20) that were being exploited in the resultant metaphors.

Seven distinct types of ME have been identified based on a cline of metaphoricity⁵⁸:

The cline ranges from MEs that have remained firmly in the maritime domain as Literal/Technical expressions (see analysis section 5.4) and are not found in the general discourse, except in maritime contexts, to a new class of resonators (See analysis section 5.8) that cannot be classified as metaphorical expressions, but are used in the general discourse to give maritime resonance to a text as stylistic devices. They are often dramatic interjections or imperatives e.g. ALL ABOARD! FULL STEAM AHEAD! rather than technical terms, although there are exceptions such as AVAST!, which usually falls into the category of a technical ME, having no figurative uses except when used as a resonator.

⁵⁷ The first paddle steamer, The Charlotte Dundas, was launched in 1803 and steam was adopted quickly over the next 50 years; trans-Atlantic steamers such as Brunel's SS Great Western (1838), SS Great Britain (1843), and SS Great Eastern (1857) revolutionised maritime trade without displacing sail.

⁵⁸ Originally discussed in 3.2.1 and illustrated in Figure 34 (p155).

These categories, with the exception of the resonator, are adapted from ideas of metaphoricity as put forward by Deignan (2005, 2006, 2009), Goatly, (2011) Hanks (2006) and others, with certain modifications. This has resulted in the following set of classifications reflecting the metaphoricity and vitality of the MEs:

- Non-ME: Expressions that are not specifically maritime, but are key for other cultural, sociological or generic reasons: e.g. AMMUNITION is not specifically maritime but is key because many maritime texts deal with warfare and gunnery.
- Literal/technical: specialised expressions that have not been adopted into the general discourse and are only found in maritime contexts: e.g. AWEIGH. A number of these are now obsolete even in the maritime domain.
- Transfer: expressions that have been adopted from maritime usage into other domains but without any substantive change in meaning: e.g. ASTERN is now used in aviation and aeronautics but retains its key meaning of towards the rear of the craft.
- Innovative: expressions used in new ways in the general discourse to express new metaphorical ideas, e.g.:

Most of you, I assume, already know what Viz is about. But in the event you washed ashore even more recently than I, you'll be delighted to know that Viz is about farts, tits and gonads

(BNC/ABS)

Where the ME is used to express an idea of awakened awareness, exploiting salient features of salvation from shipwreck and arrival in a strange place, in a sense not normally exploited in this expression.

- Conventionalised Metaphor: expressions that have been adopted from the maritime discourse with new abstract meanings in the general discourse. These are divided into two groups:
 - Dormant: well-established metaphors, where the relationship between source and target is still discernable but not required in order to interpret the metaphor and metaphorical resonances are not exploited, e.g. WELCOME ABOARD. Such metaphors may be re-activated by the introduction of maritime resonances or themes into the context.

- Active: established metaphors that still retain strong resonances with their source, knowledge of which is required for successful interpretation of the metaphor. Often exploited in extended maritime metaphors as, for example, KEEP AFLOAT:

WITH the exquisite sense of timing of the champion yachtsman Alan Bond brought the last trading session of a tumultuous decade to a halt.

The shift in winds as the international economy moved from the extravagant eighties to the uncharted nineties has been evident for sometime but only the master helmsman could have kept afloat until now. (BNC/AAS)

- Idiomatised: expressions where the figurative target meaning has become the primary meaning for most users. Such expressions retain no links with their maritime origins, e.g. TAKEN ABACK, STAND ALOOF.
- Resonators: expressions used to produce a nautical 'flavour' or flag up a nautical theme, but not carrying any specific figurative meaning within the narrative, e.g.: AVAST!

The first thing to become apparent when analysing the keywords was that these categories are, at best, only approximations. Few of the MEs fit exactly and exclusively into specific categories; many of the expressions are used across a number of categories, particularly with regard to the borders between active, dormant and idiomatic expressions.

The category of innovative expressions also proves to be illusive because, almost by definition, MEs that are 'key' are well established, so that even when used in apparently innovative contexts such as adrift in a sea of fudge (BNC/K5D), used in a political context, the innovation is in the combination of metaphors being used; adrift in a sea of occurs four times in the BNC, while fudge has been used to mean:

'present or deal with (something) in a vague or inadequate way, especially so as to conceal the truth or mislead' in politics since the early 17th century (ODP). Thus, rather than classifying the expression as innovative, it is more usefully categorised as an active conventionalised metaphor.

Table 36 (below) summarises the findings of the analysis, providing information on each identified ME, (columns 1 and 2), the domains it is used in (column 3), and the metaphorical categories it falls into (Columns 4-11). The table is organised so that MEs are grouped together vertically in the main categories, and in order of keyness in each group, and are also categorised horizontally to show how they may have membership of a number of categories. The final column is an indicator of whether an ME expresses a maritime conceptual metaphor (MCM).

The first category in the table is Non-MEs, that is expressions that have been shown not to be specific to the maritime discourse. Non-MEs are treated only briefly in the analysis as they are excluded from the study once identified. Their keyness comes about as a result of the domains they are found in, that also happen to be relevant to the maritime discourse. Thus, the domain of conflict and war is one that features strongly in the MTC and this is reflected in the keyness of words such as AMMUNITION, ARMAMENT and ACTION. These are not specifically maritime words, but are integral to the discourse of war which overlaps substantially with the maritime discourse. Other words, such as AWAY, are key because they have specialised maritime uses in certain commands and expressions such as 'BOATS AWAY!', but AWAY is a very frequent word in both the MTC and the BNC and cannot be regarded as specifically maritime per se. It is regarded as an ME, however, in the fixed expressions BOATS AWAY! and HEAVE/HAUL AWAY, which have both become resonators, on occasion, when used in the domains of reportage and pastiche. A further expression, TO CARRY AWAY, has remained as a technical maritime term.

Literal/technical expressions are words that have remained in the maritime discourse and have not been adopted for use in the general discourse, however, there are, in this list, three expressions, ALOFT, ABAFT and ALOW, that occasionally appear as resonators. Two of these, ABAFT and ALOW, are effectively obsolete terms and ALOFT is now rare in the modern maritime discourse. It is perhaps this sense of historical usage that has led to the exploitation of their maritime resonances to evoke a nautical atmosphere, without developing any metaphorical senses.

The third section of the table shows those expressions that have transferred into other domains but retained their key meanings. These expressions generally remain in technical domains such as transport, particularly aviation, architecture and engineering.

The fourth category is that of conventionalised metaphors. What is striking here is that these expressions extend across several categories from technical/literal uses to idiomatic expressions and, with the exception of ARMADA, are all expressions of MCMs. They are used in a wide range of domains, in particular, in politics, finance and sports, and also to express ideas of spirituality and emotions.

Idiomatized expressions can also appear in other categories and it is notable that all but one of these remain in use as technical/literal expressions. FULL STEAM AHEAD is interesting because it was not originally an ME but has been adopted as a maritime metaphor expressing the MCM of PROJECT/ENTERPRISE = SHIP.

6.2.1 Non-MEs

The summary in Table 36 shows that 13 of the potential MEs identified in the keyword list (21%) are not specifically maritime, but are 'key' for generic, cultural or discoursal reasons unconnected with maritime usage. Some of these words, such as ACTION, ALL and AWAY are, however, components of MEs.

6.2.2 Literal Technical MEs

20 expressions (32%) are maritime, technical MEs that are not used outside the maritime discourse, or are specialised enough to be regarded as homonymous with non-maritime uses. This group of words includes a number of highly specialised nouns and noun phrases: ACCOMODATIONS, ADVICES, ADMIRAL, ADMIRALTY, AIRS, ASDIC, ARTIFICER, SHIPS ARTICLES, ALL HANDS, which perhaps supports Hanks' suggestion that words from technical registers are less likely to be metaphorised (2006:21). However, it also includes a number of adverbial and adjectival phrases: ALOFT, ALOW, ABAFT, AFORE, AWEIGH, ATHWART, ALL STANDING, which, at first glance, seem little different from similar expressions that have been transferred, such as AFT and ASTERN (transferred into the aviation domain), or extended into metaphorical use, such as ABOARD, ADRIFT and AGROUND.

Closer inspection of these words, however, reveals that, many of these adverbial/ adjectival expressions that remain in the literal/technical list, are components of binary opposed expressions like FORE AND AFT, which has transferred, and ALOFT AND ALOW, which has become virtually obsolete with the changes in maritime technology, so that although an expression such as ALOFT remains in use it has become something of a stylistic affectation. It's maritime use is becoming more restricted as 'going aloft' into the rigging, to set sail and keep lookout, becomes less relevant to modern seamanship. Such expressions seem likely to disappear or, like ABAFT, become resonators, used almost solely for stylist effect.

In some cases the categorisation is problematic because a number of expressions are found in both maritime and non-maritime domains, but with very specialised applications in the maritime domain that make them MEs, such as ALOFT and ATHWART, which separates them from their non-maritime uses in the general discourse. The maritime use of ATHWART is found in historical texts of the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries, used widely both technically and figuratively, particularly in the expression ATHWART HAWSE, meaning literally to have something fouling the anchor cable, or figuratively, to defy, hinder or interfere with, but does not occur at all in the BNC and has become obsolete, so that neither the technical nor the figurative use survive. ATHWART, in the BNC, is generally used as a stylistic affectation and shows no maritime specialisation.

A further problem arises with some very common words that have acquired specialised uses in the maritime domain. This is particularly true of AFTER, a very common word in the BNC (114,504 occurrences) but key in the MTC because, as a prefix, it is used as an ME meaning further aft, in compound noun phrases such as AFTER-CABIN, AFTER-DECK, along with AFTMOST and AFTERMOST, in a way not found in the general discourse. The keyness of such expressions comes from this specialisation. Another example is the even more frequent word, ALL (BNC = 251,561), which has a very high keyness score in the MTC of 2116, as a result of its use in specific MEs such as ALL HANDS, ALL STANDING. Clearly, ALL is not, per se, a maritime specialisation, whereas ALL HANDS and ALL STANDING are. There are, in addition, two further expressions, ALL TO PIECES and ALL WEATHERS, that are key in the MTC, however, neither term is specifically maritime, but rather, occur more frequently in these maritime texts because of the subject matter, particularly with regard to the prominence of the weather as a protagonist in so many texts:

'She still gains! a heavy lee!' Back-water from leeward, half-way up the quarter-deck; filled one of the cutters upon the booms, and tore her all to pieces; the ship lying almost on her beam ends, and not attempting to right again. (MTC/HF/XX/PIR)

She has plenty of men, and fine men they are; all dressed in red flannel shirts and blue trousers; some of them have not taken off their canvas or tarpaulin petticoats, which are very useful to them, as they are in the boats night and day, and in all weathers. (HF/FM/10)

Another such expression is CARRY AWAY*, which has various literal and figurative senses in the general discourse but is a highly specialised ME, with the specific meaning of to break or to lose, (usually elements of rigging or superstructure as a result of storm or gunfire):

in a squall she carried away her main top gallant-mast; unfortunately, one brave seaman fell over with it and was drowned (MTC/N/NC1805)

The expression does not appear to have transferred from the maritime into the general discourse, and indeed the ME is more likely to be an extension of the more general usage, existing in parallel with non-maritime uses.

6.2.3 Transfers

The remaining MEs are all expressions that have moved from the maritime domain into the general discourse. Eight of these are MEs that have transferred into various domains but have retained their original key meaning. Thus, although they may technically be regarded as figurative uses, because they no longer refer to maritime subjects, e.g. AFT, originally only used of ships and now used of aircraft, these MEs are classified as 'Transfers' rather than metaphors. Most of these transfers are directional or positional adverbial or adjectival terms: AFT, ABAFT, ABOARD, ASTERN, ABEAM, AMIDSHIPS, and to these could be added others, such as PORT and STARBOARD, all of which have been adopted into the aviation discourse. Many of the transferred words are the result of the adoption, by the early pioneers of aviation, of maritime vocabulary into aircraft design, thus a wide range of adverbial, adjectival and nominal forms have been adopted. Nouns include (AIR)PORT, CABIN, CAPTAIN, CARGO, CHART, CRAFT, FLYING BOAT, HOLD, NAVIGATION, NAVIGATOR, PILOT, (FLIGHT-)DECK, RUDDER, SHIP (AIRSHIP). A number of these expressions have also transferred into other forms of transport, including bus, rail and occasionally other specialised domains such as motor racing.

6.2.4 Innovative Metaphors

On the cline of metaphoricity (Figure 39, above), the next classification is the Innovative metaphor. These are sometimes regarded as the only 'active' metaphors (Goatly 2011:31-32), while all forms of conventionalised metaphorical expressions are regarded as inactive or effectively moribund. From a stylistic and literary point of view, this may be a reasonable standpoint; innovative metaphors are the most creative forms of language use, producing new images and ideas about the world. From this study's point of view they are, however, of little interest. Innovative metaphors have yet to be adopted by the discourse community and thus become part of the discourse. There are very few instances of MEs being used as innovative expressions in the data but, where they do occur, they express well-established MCMs, e.g.

8 Most of you, I assume, already know what Viz is about. But in the event you washed ashore even more recently than I, you'll be delighted to know that Viz is about farts, tits and gonads (BNC/ABS)

Here the meaning of WASHED ASHORE (See analysis, section 5.6.2) can be glossed as became conscious, or perhaps saved from an ocean of ignorance, which exploits the MCMs of LIFE = SEA VOYAGE and KNOWLEDGE/IGNORANCE = OCEAN. This is quite different from the more usual figurative use of washed ashore as in:

All these odd trappings of a salvaged life, he thought.
All these bits and pieces washed ashore.
After Karen left, I lightened my life - threw things overboard. (BNC/FP7)

Here it is an active conventionalised metaphor within an extended set of maritime metaphors that exploit the MCM of LIFE = SEA VOYAGE and LIFE / PERSON = SHIP; it can be glossed as accumulated at random.

Even where MEs are used creatively in the BNC, the underlying metaphors are generally conventionalised rather than innovative. From a cultural perspective such expressions are difficult to evaluate because as one-off phenomena their significance is minimal.

6.2.5 Conventionalised Metaphors

There are 17 distinct MEs listed, which are either dormant or active conventionalised metaphors. Here the data is much more complicated; expressions that have become metaphorised are rarely confined to a single category of metaphor, or to a single domain.

Active metaphors are generally instantly recognisable as MEs and exploit maritime resonances for their meanings and force, often appearing in chains of extended metaphors, e.g. AFLOAT, as in:

...the tide had sufficiently turned to abandon him gently on the beach, leaving Harold Wilson afloat in waters so shallow that the most gentle paddle hit the sand. (BNC/FPN)

Conversely, dormant metaphors are so well established that the majority of users will rarely call to mind the specific salient features and resonances that originally gave the expression meaning; although they are available and can be re-activated in certain circumstances, they are unlikely to be used in extended maritime metaphors. E.g. ANCHORAGE as in:

Because babies grow inside their mother, because she is usually the person to feed and physically care for them, and because she provides the emotional anchorage which makes exploration possible, she has enormous importance (BNC/BNF)

The largest group of metaphors in this data set is based on ABOARD, which has eight different expressions related to it, occurring across six different domains, concerned with abstract areas of human behaviour and endeavour: emotion, spirituality, social organisation, business, politics and sport.

It is in these figurative uses, along with idiomaticised expressions discussed below in 6.2.6, that MCMs are most clearly expressed (See 6.3.1 below).

6.2.6 Idiomatic Expressions

In Chapter 3.2.1, and again in Chapter 5.2, idiomatic expressions were described as fixed primary senses of words or phrases that have moved away from their original domains and meanings and no longer carry any resonance of those original meanings. Where the original usage and the new usage co-exist they are regarded as homonymous expressions. In practical terms this means that for most users, expressions such as TAKE ABACK, TAKE ON BOARD or WORK ALONGSIDE are not regarded as metaphorical; the maritime roots of the expression have been entirely forgotten. As a result, such expressions are often opaque or at least semi-opaque and unlikely to appear in, or engender, extended maritime metaphors within the co-text. In ALDs, they are generally defined only in terms of their current (idiomatic) usage. idiomaticity exists on a cline; that is, there is a gradient between dormant conventionalised metaphors and idiomatic MEs, so that in one instance an expression might be used metaphorically and retain some maritime resonances and in another instance may appear to be purely idiomatic.

- 1 It's full steam ahead at P&O
THE continental Europe recession failed to prevent property and shipping group P&O steaming full ahead in the first six months of the year, pushing interim profits up to £291.6m from £151.2m last time. (BNC/K2T)

- 2 It's full steam ahead as investors get appetite for perks on a plate.
By Phillip Money
THE lure of 20 per cent off the cost of a portion of fish 'n' chips at Harry Ramsden's Yorkshire restaurant has proved irresistible to thousands of small investors.
The offer of shares in the group, which was listed on the USM this week, has been two and a half times oversubscribed. (BNC/A8H)

- 3 IT NOW LOOKS LIKE FULL STEAM AHEAD FOR US DIGITAL HIGH DEFINITION TELEVISION PLAN
News that the US Federal Communications Commission's Advisory Committee on Advanced Television Service, is now to review a single digital high definition television standard proposed by a Grand Alliance of all four contending consortia is raising hopes that by mid-decade, all the key technologies and infrastructures will be in place for a full-scale merging of television and computer technology. (BNC/CR2)

- 4 Meanwhile Mrs Thatcher - shortly to go to the House of Lords - welcomed the election outcome: she said: 'It was a famous victory with a clear majority.
Full steam ahead with the business of government.' (BNC/AK2)

Texts 1 - 4 illustrate the cline of metaphoricity for the semi-opaque ME FULL STEAM AHEAD. In text 1, the expression is a deliberate play on words exploiting the maritime resonances of P&O⁵⁹, the first company to carry mails and tea under steam rather than sail in the mid 19th Century (P&O, 2014). It exploits salient features of the source expression: that is, rapid forward progress, under power, reinforced by STEAMING FULL AHEAD in the co-text and the collocation with 'shipping'.

In text 2, maritime resonances are exploited, albeit subtly, by the reference to fish in 'Fish 'n' Chips', in a financial report. There are, however no further maritime collocations to reinforce the metaphorical nature of the ME. In the context of financial reporting, this is marginally more metaphorical than text 3, another financial report, where the ME is wholly idiomatic, with no suggestion in the co-text or context of any maritime connection.

Despite this loss of metaphorical force, many idiomaticised MEs are strong expressions of MCMs, in that they express a link between common historical maritime practices, artefacts and concepts, and current, more abstract, concepts in the general discourse. In text 4, although there is no explicit exploitation of maritime resonances, the SHIP OF STATE MCM, is strongly implicit in the speech, where the job of government is frequently couched in terms of steering the country on a set course, often through stormy waters. Note too the collocation of 'a famous victory', which resonates powerfully with Nelson's flagship at the battle of Trafalgar, HMS Victory, with the patriotic implications that are thus evoked. Furthermore, the ME is uttered as an imperative and, given the speaker's, position as the newly re-elected head of government, parallels the captain of a ship issuing sailing orders for the forthcoming voyage.

Having said that many idiomatic expressions are opaque or semi opaque, transparency does not preclude expressions from becoming idiomaticised. Expressions such as AWASH, are fully transparent and yet have become idiomaticised in the general discourse, while yet retaining their original, literal use in certain contexts. The MMD defines AWASH as:

- AWASH (Adjective)
- i) Thoroughly covered with a liquid
 - ii) Containing a lot or too much of something

The cline of metaphoricality is illustrated by texts 5, 6 and 7

- 5 The boat was lying far too low in the water, almost level with the surface, the decks awash (BNC/HTT)
- 6 Oil prices fell sharply, then rose a little on renewed fear of war damage. Saudi Arabia cut production by at least 10% because the world is awash with oil. (BNC/ABH)

⁵⁹ Founded in 1840, as 'The Peninsular and Oriental Steam Navigation Company' (P&O, 2014)

- 7 CERN, for instance, is ready to swing over to NT and abandon its Unix boxes because the administration side there is awash with incompatible PCs and Macs and if the techies give up their Unix stations then everybody will be on the same system. (BNC/CSX)

Text 5 is a literal maritime application of the expression, while in text 6, AWASH is used metaphorically, exploiting the salient maritime features of AWASH as water/liquid inundating or covering a surface or object, through the liquid nature of oil. In text 7, there is no exploitation of the salient features of the maritime AWASH, apart from the sense of excess, thus making this a purely idiomatic application of the word.

A further point about the process of idiomatisation is shown by the data in this study. The process of transformation of the technical expression, TAKE ABACK, into figurative use can be seen in the works of writers such as Smollett (1751), Hood (1840), Marryat (1842), Hewlett (1844) and Cooper (1844), who deliberately marked and, on occasion, translated the phrase for the information of a readership they assumed to be unfamiliar with the term, suggesting that, during that period, the metaphor was an innovative one that required explanation.

- 8 Mr. Kite observed this also, and remarked that our movements had been so prompt as 'to take the rascals aback.' He meant, they did not exactly know what we were at, and had not kept away with us. (MTC/HF/JFC/1) (Cooper, 1844)

Technical expressions, such as TAKEN ABACK, BROAD (IN THE) BEAM(ED), BEAM ENDS, GET UNDER WEIGH (WAY), (STAND) ALOOF may owe their status as idioms to the popularisation of maritime writing during the eighteenth and nineteenth century, through writers such as Smollett and Marryat, and later through Melville and Conrad and others. Accounts of maritime adventures and war at sea and the high profile of the British Navy, particularly during the Napoleonic wars, when the Naval Chronicle as well as other newspapers, pamphlets and broadsheets were publishing daily accounts of the exploits of the Navy, and with a high proportion of the population actively engaged in maritime work and all foreign trade being carried by sea, would all have served to familiarise the population at large with the maritime vernacular.

Although the importance of maritime trade and activity has declined hugely in the consciousness of the modern British population, these idiomatised expressions reflect a concept of the world based on the historical maritime foundations of the country.

Maritime resonances are not exploited, despite the apparent transparency of the terms, because the concepts they represent are so deeply embedded in the cultural consciousness of the discourse community using them. These technical terms have passed into the general discourse by shedding the complex nuances of maritime use, to take on new primary meanings, while the technical language of sailing ships has all but disappeared, taking the original meanings of these expressions with it, except in history books and works of historical fiction by modern writers.

6.2.7 Resonators

The final group of expressions are what I have termed 'Resonators'. These are usually fixed idiomatic expressions that have been adopted or developed from MEs. They are expressions used for effect, often comic, rather than specifically for their semantic content. A number of such expressions are listed in the data, two of which are corruptions of genuine MEs, FULL STEAM AHEAD and ALL HANDS TO THE PUMPS, neither of which are found being used literally in the MTC. They are often predicative complements marked with 'it's', as in IT'S FULL SPEED AHEAD and IT'S ALL HANDS ON DECK and, in the BNC data, usually come from the field of reportage, especially television news. Even when used in a maritime context, they are not intended to be interpreted literally but are used to provide a nautical flavour to the report or establish a maritime theme. Other specialised nautical expressions are frequently used in the same way: AHOY, AVAST, AYE, AYE (SIR/ CAP'N), which tend to be found in pastiches and more light-hearted reportage or advertising texts. An advertising leaflet from Plymouth City Council promoting a 'Pirate Weekend' illustrates this point well (See Figure 40,below).

Unlike other metaphorical expressions discussed in this study, resonators are defined purely by context; the only salient feature of the expression being exploited being that of its maritime origins or association. The expressions are often devoid of semantic content other than as indicators of a nautical theme or topic.

On this page there are six maritime resonators:

- Aarh Jim Ma Lad
- All aboard
- Me hearties
- All hands on deck
- Fair speed
- ye' hearties!

In one sense, any unequivocally maritime turn of phrase might be regarded as a resonator if it is used specifically to create or reinforce the nautical nature of a text or character. Thus, Smollett uses such phrases to paint a vivid portrait of the character of the old sea dog Hawser Trunnion, in the novel Peregrine Pickle (Smollett, 1776):

'What! leave me at last, Jack, after we have weathered so many hard gales together? D-- my limbs! I thought you had been more of an honest heart: I looked upon you as my foremast, and Tom Pipes as my mizen: now he is carried away, if so be as you go too, my standing rigging being decayed, d'ye see, the first squall will bring me by the board. D-- ye, if in case I have given offence, can't you speak above-board? and I shall make you amends.'
(Ch. XV: pp. n/a)

A feature of Smollett's writing, as with many writers at that time, is the convention of using his character's names to reflect their nautical character or background, so that we have emphatically nautical names, such as Jack Hatchway and Hawser Trunnion⁶⁰, where the names themselves are effectively maritime resonators. In the BNC data, this convention is also found occasionally, particularly in children's fiction:

The beast was still thinking this when he heard a loud whistle from the tree branch above him.

⁶⁰ TRUNNIONS. The arms, or two pieces of metal projecting from the opposite sides of a gun, by which it rests and swings upon its carriage, acting as an axis of elevation or depression. Also, pieces of well-seasoned wood, used in securing the ship's timbers. (Smyth 1867:700)

'Ahoy there!

Attention, Sergeant!

The dog stopped and looked up.

'Ahoy?'

His eyes moved along the branch and came to rest on a brilliant blue bird sitting there.

Who are you?'

'Admiral Reginald King-Fisher, Retired,' replied the bright blue bird

(BNC/CFJ)

It should be pointed out that resonators are not restricted to MEs. The aviation domain also has resonating expressions:

- 1 Still to come on Central News, Chocks away!
Into the Blue with the Fighter Aces of World War One. (BNC/K1P)

- 2 Bandits at six o'clock!
IAN 'HIGH-FLIER' OSBORNE isn't unduly worried.
'We've ages yet - it's only half past two', he squeaks.
Chocks away!
Put on those flying goggles, tweak that handlebar moustache and blow the enemy to hell! (BNC/C87)

- 3 Chocks away
HARD on the heels of Finn McCool comes the announcement today of the sell-off of Northern Ireland Airports. (BNC/HJ4)

In each of the above examples, the expressions have become effectively delexicalised, there is no expectation on the part of the writer that the reader will attempt to decode the expressions as anything other than a signal of the aviation theme of the story.

Resonators are often used for humorous effect or to signal that a particular news item is, as in aviation texts 1 and 2 above, a light-hearted piece, although note that, in text 3 above, the item is a political sketch, where the use of the resonator signals the aviation theme in a deeply ironic attack on governmental privatisation plans for airports in Northern Ireland.

Resonances appear to promote a sense of shared cultural identity by supplying a familiar context that an audience instantly recognises, providing a short cut, particularly for journalists, to a host of nuances and assumptions about the nature of the text or topic that requires minimal decoding. The use of resonators appears to prime the audience for humour or ironic reference to a topic and is thus a favoured tool of journalists, particularly those writing in the sporting and political domains. Doubtless, further investigation would reveal resonators from other domains, however that is another study and cannot be pursued further, here.

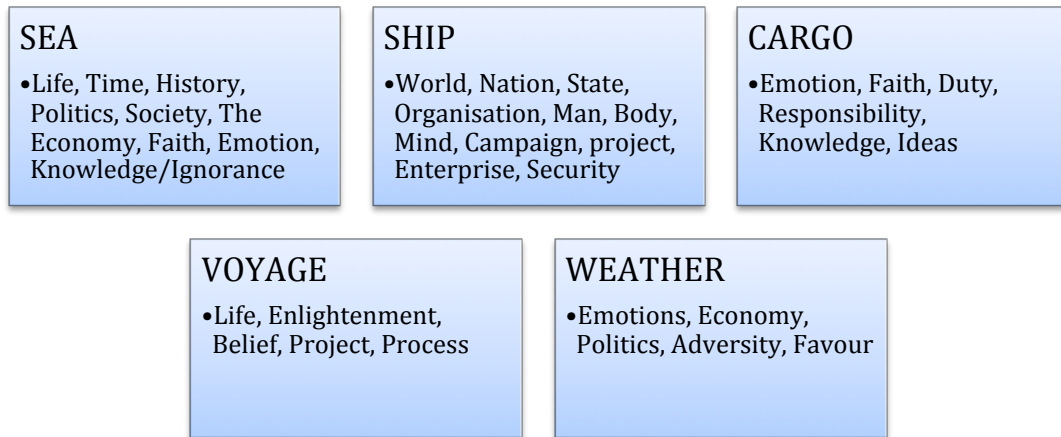

6.3 RQ3: MEs and MCMs: Some conclusions

In this section I discuss the main findings of the study in terms of the maritime expressions that have been identified and the maritime conceptual metaphors that underlie them and the cultural significance of these metaphors. I also discuss the role of register and domain in selecting and shaping the MEs that we use in various discourses.

6.3.1 Maritime Conceptual Metaphors

It was noted in 3.1 that underlying the linguistic metaphors that are central to our language and communication, is a complex structure of conceptual metaphors that, according to Lakoff and Johnson (2003) and Kovesces (2002, 2005) and others, allow us to express and understand abstract ideas in terms of our concrete experiences, for the most part based on ideas of our own physical presence and physical phenomena in the world we inhabit. Lakoff and Johnson and Kovesces have focussed on the overarching conceptual metaphors that we use to describe and define our world. This study clearly demonstrates that at a cultural level we define ourselves with a number of maritime conceptual metaphors that give us a sense of national identity. It is not just that LIFE IS A JOURNEY, but, more specifically, that LIFE IS A SEA VOYAGE, with the concomitant hazards of adverse weather, shoals, rocks and the possibility of shipwreck, or drowning if one were to GO OVERBOARD, get OFF COURSE or GET OUT OF ONE'S DEPTH. When a storm, physical or financial, threatens, we BATTEN DOWN THE HATCHES, and will call ALL HANDS ON DECK to MAN THE PUMPS. Thus it is in the domains of politics, business and sport, where cultural identity is stated most strongly, that we find, particularly in the journalistic register, that MCMs are prominent. British politicians, in their need to mobilise patriotic sentiment are likely to use specifically maritime images because of the power of the MCMs they express. Thus STATE = SHIP, POPULATION = CREW, PARTY = SHIP and CAMPAIGN = SEA VOYAGE, POLITICS = SEA, are key components in the rhetoric of politics, while similarly, in the business domain, ECONOMY = SEA, MANAGEMENT = CAPTAIN AND OFFICERS, EMPLOYEES = CREW, COMPANY = SHIP, PROGRESS = VOYAGE, PROFIT/SUCCESS = DESTINATION.

The sample of maritime language examined in this study is a very small one, based on just 61 keywords extracted from a total list of 9000 key words, but it clearly shows the importance of MCMs that appear consistently in the data, just from words beginning with A. A number of MCMs were listed in Chapter 3.1: Figure 11; that list is expanded in Figure 41, below.

These MCMs have all emerged from the data analysed here. In particular, all but one (ARMADA) of the conventionalised metaphors identified, and all of the idiomaticised MEs, have been shown to map onto MCMs. Many of the MEs express more than one MCM, giving rise to multi-layered senses as they activate the various concepts. For instance ABOARD/ON BOARD can express at least five different MCMs in its various metaphorical uses:

Metaphor	SHIP	SHIP'S CREW	SEA	VOYAGE	CARGO
Entity	Endeavour	Family	Business	Campaign	Duty
	Ideology	Group	Economy	Life	Emotion
	Man	Individual	Faith	Project	Faith
	Organisation	Party	Politics	Relationships	Idea
	State	Team	Relationships	Spirit	Knowledge
Realised by					Responsibility
	climb on board	all aboard	go overboard	all aboard	take on board come on / aboard	man overboard	man	come aboard	throw jump aboard	welcome aboard	overboard	go overboard	overboard
	man overboard
	welcome aboard

Many ABOARD/ON BOARD metaphors are dormant or idiomatic, thus the MCMS are deeply rooted, others, probably due to the transparency of the expressions, are still active and exploit maritime resonances to reinforce the underlying conceptual metaphors e.g.

All these odd trappings of a salvaged life, he thought.

All these bits and pieces washed ashore.
 After Karen left, I lightened my life - threw things overboard.
 What did I keep?
 Some things of hers; some things of mine. (BNC/FP7)

All but one of the metaphorical expressions listed in the study, are used consistently to express MCMs, especially SEA, SHIP or VOYAGE metaphors e.g. ABOARD, ADRIFT, AGROUND, ANCHOR / ANCHORAGE, AFLOAT/ FLOAT.

The only exception in this data set is ARMADA, which is usually used as a transfer, but occasionally occurs as an active metaphor, where the form is generally fixed as AN ARMADA OF X, making it an established metaphor for any large formation of objects or people. It does not express any MCMs, however, one might argue that its use in the naming of streets, buildings, companies and projects, along with the elevated national recognition of archetypical Englishmen connected with it, such as Drake, Raleigh and Hawkins, make it a powerful cultural symbol of British prowess and interest and a sense of victory against the odds, that is activated in certain contexts:

- 1 DEVELOPMENT of huge gas reserves in the northern and central North Sea moved a stage further yesterday with an agreement by a British Gas-led group to exploit three discoveries with reserves of one trillion cubic feet at an estimated cost of about £800m.
 Production from the newly-named Armada complex is due to start in late 1996 with peak output of about 300m cubic feet a day of gas condensate - a mixture of gas and light oil - from the Maggie and Howard field, and two other discoveries, Drake and Hawkins. (BNC/AKL)

- 2 BRITAIN HAS been instructed by the European Community to suspend immediately key provisions of the 1988 Merchant Shipping Act, designed to repel a 100-strong armada of Spanish vessels fishing in United Kingdom waters.
 In an urgent ruling yesterday, the European Court of Justice in Luxembourg ordered the government immediately to repeal specific clauses of the act which relate to the Spanish presence, on the grounds that they illegally discriminate against foreigners.
 The provisions were incorporated in the act to prevent Spanish trawlers joining the UK shipping register and freely exploiting the fishing quotas which have been allocated to Britain each year since 1983 under the Common Fisheries Policy.(BNC/A4H)

Text 1 demonstrates the exploitation of ARMADA by national commercial interests. The choice of project name and the associated names of gas fields, emphatically marking British interests and the patriotic nature of the enterprise. Text 2, comes from a British broadsheet newspaper, The Independent, written from an explicitly Anglo-centric viewpoint. The phrase 'armada of Spanish fishing vessels' is carefully chosen to exploit resonances with the original Spanish Armada, thus activating MCMs of STATE = SHIP, POLICY = VOYAGE, , PARLIAMENT/ GOVERNMENT = SHIP'S CAPTAIN and NATION = CREW.

Below are further examples of various MCMS expressed by MEs that do not start with A and are therefore not included in the analysis in Chapter 5, but are taken from the full keyword list generated from the MTC.

1 POLITICS = SEA :

ME TAKE SOUNDINGS (keyness 1099)

The practice was that the Queen with the aid of her Private Secretary would take soundings from a variety of sources including Privy Councillors, senior politicians and party whips. (BNC/HJR)

2 TIME = SEA

ME: TIDE (keyness 3565)

We can at least now see how important a policy it might have been, how great a shift in the tides of history that it was attempting. (BNC/EW1)

3 (a) ECONOMY = WEATHER:

BUSINESS = SHIP

PROJECT = VOYAGE

(b) HOME = SHIP

ME BATTEN DOWN THE HATCHES (Keyness 749)

(a) Yesterday, Marchant boss Philip Marchant said: 'We have had to batten down the hatches. We feel 1993 will be a tough year.' (BNC/CF8)

(b) Don't worry, your brother will get here.
But you might find the cottage a bit draughty if it gets really rough.'
'I'll batten down the hatches,' I told her. (BNC/CKF)

4 LIFE = VOYAGE:

ME NAVIGATION (Keyness =1161)

In his speech at the festival, however, Havel said: 'The belief that one can navigate through history and rewrite one's own biography with impunity is a traditional Central European delusion. (BNC/HKW)

5 SECURITY = SHIP :

ME COPPERED (keyness 151) (COPPER BOTTOMED)

But these phrases, like the assurances of Mrs Thatcher, were couched in general terms, without the copper-bottomed guarantees of American troops, airbases, and nuclear weapons modernisation programmes, which the Prime Minister would like. (BNC/A8J)

6 STATE = SHIP:

ME HELM (Keyness 3461)

With a new Prime Minister at the helm, the time was opportune for a further review of strategy to take account of these recent advances in weapon systems. (BNC/ABA)

7 ENTERPRISE = SHIP:

ME ON THE ROCKS (Keyness 535)

But I had it from Makepeace, who was here at the time.
Three years ago, it was, and the school was nearly on the rocks. (BNC/H8Y)

8 CAMPAIGN = SHIP

ME AFLOAT (Keyness 1492) /SINKING (Keyness 816)

It is not an exaggeration to say that these kept the campaign afloat when it appeared to be sinking for lack of funds. (BNC/GXG)

9 ORGANISATION = SHIP

POLITICS = SEA

CAMPAIGN = VOYAGE

ADVERSITY = ROUGH WEATHER:

ME: WEATHER (keyness 4070); STORM (Keyness 973)

Lloyd George had weathered the storm of labour unrest, and after 'Black Friday' this was clearly abating. (BNC/EW1)

10 IDEA/ KNOWLEDGE = CARGO;

ME STOWED (Keyness 1323)

Ludens, in his present highly textured frame of mind, stowed away this significant memory as not at present relevant to his proceedings. (BNC/APM)

11 POLITICS = SEA

PROJECT = VOYAGE

FAVOUR = WEATHER

ME FAIR (keyness 395) WIND (keyness 4443)

In Committee, the Minister said that he wanted to give a fair wind to employee-management buy-outs. (BNC/ G3H)

12 BUSINESS = SHIP

ME FLAGSHIP (keyness 251)

Since 1928 the OED has been the flagship of OUP's fleet of publications.
(BNC/EAT)

These expressions, taken from the MTC keyword list, demonstrate, particularly in examples 3, 8, 9 and 11 above, that these MCMs are systematic and cohesive (Kövecses, 2002, Lakoff and Johnson, 2003). The evocation of maritime imagery is not haphazard, particularly in the domains of politics, finance and business.

6.3.2 The influence of register and domain

It was shown in the original discussion of the metaphorical model used in this study (Chapter 3) that a change of domain from source to target is a prerequisite for metaphorisation. Indeed this is one of the key tests that can be applied to an expression to show that it is no longer being used in its original sense. However, the corpus data has also revealed information about patterns of usage and the persistence of maritime metaphors in particular registers and domains.

It can be seen, for instance, that reportage is a significant register for the use of metaphorised MEs. The necessity, in journalistic writing for effective, eye catching headlines and impactful, but somewhat formulaic article structures, means that set phrases and fixed expressions that carry readily understood messages are especially valuable, saving journalists the necessity of crafting new and original material for each new article. MEs provide useful shortcuts that, because they usually express MCMs, are readily decoded by the reader. This appears to be particularly true in the domains of sports writing. Note the preference, for instance, for certain MEs within sports reportage, such as KEEP/STAY AFLOAT, and the use of extended maritime metaphors within the genre to exploit MCMS of CLUB = SHIP; TEAM = CREW; LEAGUE = SEA; CAMPAIGN = VOYAGE:

- 1 Hereford lived dangerously but by half time were still managing to keep afloat. United began shipping water after the break, a goal from the Fourth Division's top scorer, Dave Bamber doing the damage. (BNC/KIG)
- 2 It's something of a miracle that Posh are still alive. They were collecting cash in a bucket to stay afloat until Turner arrived in January last year. And he did far more than help them just to survive. (BNC/HAE)

Here 'collecting cash in a bucket' resonates strongly with the concept of 'bailing out' a sinking boat:

- 3 Fortunately, two or three buckets had been thrown into the boat; by the active use of which, and the aid of hats, which were incessantly employed in the same species of service, the water was bailed out, and the boat freed in a few minutes. (MTC/N/NC/1806) and 'bailing out' a sinking company or football club.

- 4 Unfortunately when you're short of money, you know, you have to try and get it from wherever you can and of course, in lots of cases, the supermarket chains have actually bailed out some football clubs, you know, by buying pieces of the car park etc. (BNC/KS7)

In texts 1- 4 above it can be seen that there is considerable overlap between the domains of sport and business. Sports reports, especially those concerned with professional football and Formula 1 motor racing are generally concerned as much with the financial success of the teams as their sporting prowess and thus the metaphorical language employed is very similar and the same MCMs tend to be activated, with the salient features of companies and commercial competition being exploited in much the same way as they are when writing of teams, clubs and sporting competitions.

The business discourse relies heavily on maritime metaphors, with companies almost inevitably being characterised as ships sailing courses through financial and political seas, and always in danger of sinking, so that the expressions KEEP/STAY AFLOAT are a consistent feature of the discourse.

- 5 Receivers called in to keep the shipbuilding company afloat after it failed to win a Ministry of Defence helicopter carrier order were meeting union officials this morning. (BNC/HJ4)
- 6 Professional management will be needed to keep firms afloat, but it may not be enough to restore the explosive growth of the past few years. (BNC/ABD)
- 7 When other staff are away Margaret appears to be left keeping the ship afloat by answering messages, doing jobs that are not really hers, and by the end of most days she is usually totally exhausted. (BNC/AYJ)
- 8 While other shipyards have hit the rocks, H&W has been kept afloat, and the order book is full until early 1995. (BNC/K2F)

In both business and politics, the maritime metaphor is a constant presence, as illustrated by another relatively low scoring keyword, FLAGSHIP, which occurs 260 times in the BNC, with only 34 instances being maritime and the remainder all referring to companies, products or policies e.g. :

- 1 ever pan-European campaign for its flagship liqueur Tia Maria. Public
- 2 clasped hands with IBM's once-proud flagship, its now-sullied mainfram
- 3 ime Minister goes down with her own flagship'. It was a good knock abo
- 4 ators. 'When we were setting up our flagship London/Glasgow service, i
- 5 ondon set up a string of shops. His flagship, in St Martin's Lane, was
- 6 as no surprise. 'ESAs are seen as a flagship in MAFF and the government

In the business domain, FLAGSHIP appears to have become idiomaticised; it rarely exploits extended maritime metaphors. The MMD provides two distinct definitions:

- 1 a large ship that leads a group of ships

2. the biggest, most important, or best thing in a group

The two uses appear to be homonymous, and it seems unlikely that any conscious effort is being made to activate the MCM of PROJECT/ENTERPRISE = SHIP. In contrast, in the political discourse, extended maritime metaphors are part of the persuasive rhetoric of debate, relying heavily at times on the MCMs of STATE = SHIP, GOVERNMENT/ PRIME MINISTER = CAPTAIN/PILOT, POLICY = COURSE and WORLD/FINANCIAL POLITICS = OCEAN:

- 9 The hon. Member for Rugby and Kenilworth stood up and praised it to the heavens - they all did, calling it the flagship of their policy. Now the flagship has been sunk, more quickly than the Mary Rose, but unlike that ship it will not come up again, even after a few hundred years.
(BNC/HHW)

In text 9, the ME is part of an elaborate metaphor designed to portray the government as the crew of a sinking ship. Similarly the KEEP/STAY AFLOAT metaphor is frequently exploited deliberately to evoke such deeply embedded MCMs:

- 10 He said that the army was an 'unpolitical' body, keen to keep the 'ship of state' afloat, and added that 'after seven months of democracy the country is once again in the grip of the horror of uncertainty'. (BNC/HLB)
- 11 So much for the mainstream, but how successful were the left at staying afloat in, or even swimming against, this formidable rightward moving tide?
(BNC/ARD)

6.4 Assessing the Methodology

The study is a corpus based examination of MEs, using a purpose built corpus of approximately 8.8 million words of maritime writings (the MTC) and the BNC reference corpus. Using these two corpora, an initial keyword list of 16,718 words was generated, of which the top 9000 (by keyness score) were selected and ordered alphabetically to identify words commencing with the letter A. This produced a manageable list of 492 words that subsequent cleaning reduced to 61 target keywords for analysis⁶¹.

The analysis was carried out using collocation and concordancing techniques to find and define maritime expressions that had transferred into the general discourse and to analyse their use and meaning and the processes of change they had undergone.

⁶¹ See appendix A4 for complete word lists and clean-up data

The value of the MTC lies in the amount of data on maritime texts that it makes available to the analyst that has not been systematically compiled and analysed previously, including data on usage by particular writers and in particular genres that may have an influence on which words are adopted into the general discourse and which are not. The fact that a particular popular author, such as Tobias Smollett or Joseph Conrad, favours a particular turn of phrase or expression as, for example 'ADVENTURER' (see 5.3.4), may well influence that expression's subsequent adoption by the discourse community. The keyness of certain words and phrases in the MTC certainly stems from such uses on occasion. Although the analysis of ADVENTURER shows that its high keyness score of 304 is not specifically related to maritime use, the fact that it is a favoured expression of at least two popular and influential maritime writers means that its use is significantly associated with the maritime discourse. The identification and extraction of keywords and their analysis has ensured that expressions have been selected on the basis of relevance within the discourse, rather than personal preference or native speaker intuition on the part of the analyst, and this has proved particularly valuable in the assessment of metaphoricity.

Without the keyness data, certain maritime metaphors are unlikely to have been selected for examination. For example AWASH; K=41 (See 5.7.6), would not have stood out as being of particular interest; it is not particularly frequent in either corpora occurring just 47 times in the MTC and only 143 times (a frequency of just 1.62/million words) in the BNC, however the keyness score draws attention to its specialised maritime use; a comparison of collocational data and cluster analysis then reveals the patterns AWASH WITH and AWASH IN as having mainly metaphorical uses in the BNC and carrying strong negative prosodies.

Having a substantial body of evidence of the genuine maritime usage of expressions, whether from non-fiction technical sources such as log books and journals or fictional texts written by qualified maritime authors, with genuine experience and knowledge of maritime practice and maritime language, such as Marryat, Conrad or Fullerton, available, makes the processes of transference and extension from one domain into another easier to identify and makes the markers of metaphoricity clearer to the interpretation of the observer. While dictionaries can provide detailed etymologies and authoritative definitions, they cannot provide the wealth of data of actual usage that the corpus can provide.

While it might be argued that much of this information can be gained through the use of dictionaries, in particular the OED, Smyth (1867) and modern ALDs, to provide current usage information, the corpus approach has provided a much greater range of evidence with which to work than can be found in the dictionaries. It has revealed details of usage not always apparent from dictionary entries, as well as providing solid evidence of whether particular expressions were used at sea and which were not. For example, the expression FULL STEAM AHEAD (5.6.14) occurs 24 times in the BNC but does not occur once in the MTC, suggesting that this is not a genuine maritime expression, as used at sea, but is possibly a borrowing from the railways. This has not however, stopped it from being adopted as an ME by journalists, as in:

It's full steam ahead at P&O

THE continental Europe recession failed to prevent property and shipping group P&O steaming full ahead in the first six months of the year, pushing interim profits up to £291.6m from £151.2m last time. (BNC/K2T)

Here, the use of 'it's' in the caption, marks this as a resonator, while the phrase 'steaming full ahead', in the body of the text, is a genuine ME using the standard maritime form in a maritime metaphor.

The use of concordance data has revealed collocations which can indicate when phrases are marked for metaphorical use, as is the case with AWASH WITH, discussed below, where the use of with almost invariably signals metaphorical usage. Concordance information has also facilitated the recognition of a particular subset of expressions as resonators, that is, words used for stylistic effect rather than semantic content.

The corpus data has also revealed evidence of the negative and positive prosody of many of these MEs, which is generally not given in dictionary entries. As an example, the OED has no entry for the specific phrase WASHED ASHORE (see 5.6.2 for full analysis), nor does it appear in the ALDs consulted. ASHORE is defined in the OED as simply:

Ashore, adv.

1. Of motion: to or on the land

2, Of position: on shore on the land

While Smyth gives

ASHORE. Aground, on land –To go ashore, to disembark from a boat.

Opposed to Aboard (1867:565)

The corpus evidence, in the form of concordances from the MTC and the BNC, shows that not only is WASHED ASHORE a fixed ME, but also that it is overwhelmingly negative in its use, carrying with it maritime resonances of shipwreck and ruin.

The top drawer contained a bizarre mixture of objects: a stapler, a bottle of ink, assorted keys, a leather bookmark, an empty black plastic container for film - the flotsam washed ashore in an office from any human life (BNC/G1W)

Similarly AWASH (see 5.7.6) is defined in the OED as Awash, adv, (adj.)

1. On a level or flush with the surface of the water, so that it just washes over
- 2
 - a. Washing about, at the mercy of the waves
 - b. fig. Esp. const, with: full of or abounding in; overflowing or rife with.
 - c. As attrib. adjective

Although definition 2 (a) hints at the negative prosody of AWASH through the use of the expression 'at the mercy of', it gives no hint of the negative sense of the figurative use (b), where, according to the MTC and BNC evidence, AWASH WITH is negative in 95 out of 124 occurrences, in such phrases as

- 1 Only six winters earlier, respectable London had been awash with fears of violent crime. (BNC/EDE)

There are just 12 instances of its use as a positive expression and these all relate to colour, light or crops; Text 2, below, being part of an extended maritime metaphor:

- 2 ...the region was awash with oceans of rye (BNC/FAT).

6.4.1 Assessment of the effectiveness of the corpus design

The MTC is designed as a corpus for the investigation of 'Maritime' English and its influence on Standard English. The corpus is not tagged or marked-up in any way, other than a simple coding tag to identify each text. Any encoding or conversion of texts has been carried-out using the normal suite of Microsoft Office tools (MS Excel, MS Word) and WordSmith Tools, along with the ABBYY Fine Reader 10 ® OCR programme. Texts were sourced using the Google Search Engine and the Project Gutenberg website or obtained electronically directly from the publishers.

The corpus has performed well, with very few problems being encountered in the extraction of data, using WordSmith Tools and the BNC as a reference corpus.

The subcorpus design of the MTC, based on the various registers or text types that compose the corpus, worked well, but it would have been helpful to have had more information about individual texts held within the corpus, probably as an HTML header for each text, as is supplied in the BNC, rather than holding the information in a separate Excel database sheet (see Appendix A1-3), as is the case with the current design. In a corpus the size of the MTC, this has not proved to be a major issue, however, it is acknowledged that as the corpus becomes larger, this is an issue that will need to be addressed.

6.4.2 Size and balance of the corpus

The final make-up of the MTC is, in the end, governed by the pragmatic considerations of the availability of materials in the correct format at the time of construction of the corpus, it is thus an opportunistic corpus. The balance of the corpus is discussed in some detail in 4.1.3.1. At 8.8 million words, the MTC is a reasonable size, although it inevitably represents only a tiny fraction of the maritime material that has been produced over time. The main issue is not the size, although making the corpus larger is always desirable, but the balance of texts within it.

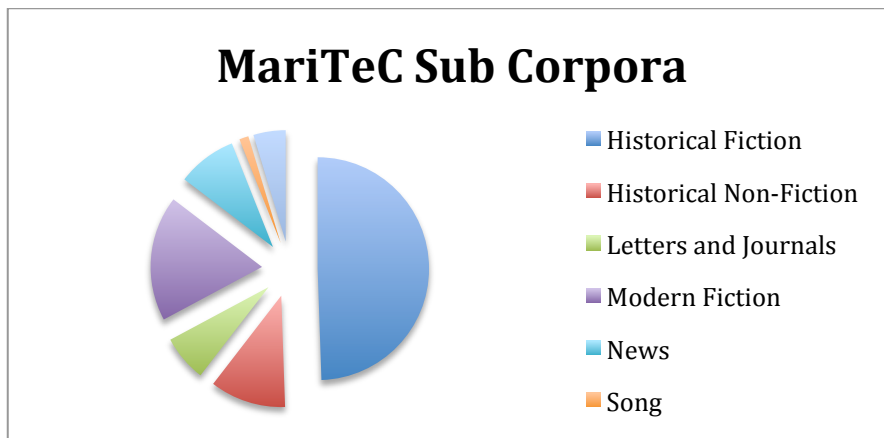

Figure 44, above, shows clearly the imbalance: Historical Maritime Fiction is over-represented, providing nearly 50% of the total the MTC word-count, with the works of two writers in particular, Marryat and Conrad, providing 54% of the words in the subcorpus. The other subcorpora are considerably smaller. The Modern Fiction subcorpus is, it can be argued, better balanced, because I made a choice to limit the number of works by particular authors, in particular genres, in a way that I did not for the Historical Fiction corpus. Thus no particular writer's style has a disproportionate effect on the overall results.

There is a conflict between the desire for balance and the desire for quantity and quality of data, and, in the case of historical texts, the argument for quantity and quality prevailed, as I judged the historical data to be more pertinent to the development of maritime metaphors than the modern texts.

The Historical Non-fiction and News subcorpora are much smaller than I would have wished them to be. Only a very small proportion of the archive material held by the various maritime museums and collections has been digitised in a form that can easily be put into computerised corpora. Where digitisation has been carried out, it tends to be in the form of searchable PDF images, as is the case with the British Library digitisation of eighteenth and nineteenth century newspapers (British Library, 2010), where the page images cannot be converted into .txt format. Digitisation into .txt format, as has been done with the Project Gutenberg texts, which is what makes them invaluable for this sort of corpus. More projects along the lines of Locke's (1999) transcription of Aaron Thomas' journal of 1798-9, and the genealogy research website, ANCESTRY.COM (particularly useful for providing texts of emigration voyages), would provide an invaluable asset for further corpus-based work into maritime writing for linguistic, sociological and historical research.

Other digitised sources highlight the need for improved OCR technology. This is particularly noticeable with texts such as the digitised Naval Chronicles (University of California Library) that have been so valuable in this study, but which relied on the accuracy of OCR scanning, which, as discussed in 4.1.6, has resulted in a very high error rate within the texts, due to the physical nature of the original documents and the typeface used.

It is intended that the corpus will continued to be expanded to provide better balance and the organisation of the subcorpora will be reviewed to better represent the text types needed.

Atkins et al. suggest that

Controlling the 'balance' of a corpus is something which may be undertaken only after the corpus (or at least an initial provisional corpus) has been built; it depends on feedback from the corpus users, who as they study the data will come to appreciate the strengths of the corpus and be aware of its specific weaknesses. (1992:6)

The MTC has proved to be an effective tool in the present study; ultimately the practical considerations of compiling the MTC and providing adequate data for analysis were of greater importance than considerations of balance. As the corpus grows the question of balance will be addressed in greater detail.

6.4.3 Representing spoken language

The balance between fiction and non-fiction texts raises particular issues with regard to claims of representativeness and in particular my claim that maritime English, as represented in the MTC, is an occupational discourse. In particular, the absence of spoken data means that we have no verbatim record of the words actually spoken by sailors as they went about their work during the eighteenth and nineteenth and early twentieth centuries. According to various observers, English, as spoken by sailors during this period was distinctive and could hardly be described as 'standard English'. Author, Sir Henry Fielding, founder of the Bow Street Runners said, in 1776:

When one goes to Rotherhithe or Wapping, in which places are chiefly inhabited by sailors, but that somewhat the same language is spoken, a man would be apt to think himself in another country. Their manner of living, speaking, acting, dressing and behaving are so peculiar to themselves.

(Cited in Rediker, 1987:11)

While, 100 years later, Laura Alexandrine Smith, collector of sea songs and shanties remarked:

Sailors' talk is a dialect as distinct from ordinary English as is Lowland Scotch. Certainly, English words are used, but their signification is many times remote from the meaning they have in shore parlance. The meaning of many sea-phrases is too subtle for translation; some fit vocational conditions so accurately, that any divergence from the exact expression would puzzle a seaman exceedingly. (1888)

The MTC contains various journals, such as those of Aaron Thomas (1798) (MTC/L/AT/THO), Adam Ward (1838-40) (MTC/L/EW/WAR) and Thomas Leech (1843) (MTC/L/SL/THIR) made up of authentic sailor's writings. These, however, only make up about 7% of the corpus overall. Other non-fiction texts make up a further 11%, and these contain considerable amounts of technical maritime language, particularly in texts such as the parliamentary reports into the loss of the Titanic (1912) (MTC/HNF/CH/TIT) and the loss of the Cataraque (1846) (MTC/HNF/HOC/CAT).

The fiction texts, both historical and modern, represent 67% of the corpus. The historical fiction texts are all written by sailors such as Captain Frederick Marryat 1792-1848), a distinguished career naval officer, who served at sea from 1806 until 1830 (Smith and Ballantyne, 1888:3), Tobias Smollett (1721-1771), who served as a naval surgeon from 1741 to 1744 (NMM, 2013), Joseph Conrad (1857-1924) who served in the merchant navy for 16 years (McGovern, 2002:1410) and Herman Melville (1818-1891) who sailed for five years with American merchant and whaling fleets as an ordinary seaman (McGovern, 2002:350).

In the Modern Fiction sub- corpus, only two of the authors, C. S. Forester (1889-1966) (McGovern, 2002:1037) and Patrick O' Brian (Encyclopaedia Britannica, 2013a), did not have direct maritime experience; the remaining authors all have seagoing credentials. Dudley Pope, served in the merchant Navy during the Second World War and spent much of his later life sailing and living on board boats (King, 2000), Alexander Fullerton, was a Royal Navy officer and naval historian (Pope, 1979: Preface), Nicholas Monsarrat served with the RNVR throughout the Second World War, from 1940-1946, rising to the rank of lieutenant commander (Fullerton, 1976: Preface) and Richard Woodman, (Woodman, 1997) had a 37 year seagoing career in the merchant navy (Encyclopaedia Britannica, 2013b).

The language used by fiction writers, particularly those in the historical fiction subcorpus, may be regarded as being close to authentic maritime language, albeit, possibly edited for consumption by a 'lay' readership. Thus Marryat's characters speak in what appear to be authentic maritime voices:

'Well, then, you must know when I was a-board of the Terp-sy-chore there was a fore-topman, of the name of Bill Harness, a good sort of chap enough, but rather soft in the upper-works. Now, we'd been on the Jamaica station for some years, and had come home, and merry enough, and happy enough we were (those that were left of us), and we were spending our money like the devil. Bill Harness had a wife, who was very fond of he, and he was very fond of she, but she was a slatternly sort of a body, never tidy in her rigging, all adrift at all times, and what's more, she never had a shoe up at heel, so she went by the name of Slatternly Sall, and the first lieutenant, who was a 'ticular sort of a chap, never liked to see her on deck, for you see she put her hair in paper on New Year's day, and never changed it or took it out till the year came round again. (Marryat, 1834) (MTC/HF/FM/2)

as do Melville's creations:

'Spread yourselves,' cried Ahab; 'give way, all four boats. Thou, Flask, pull out more to leeward!'
 'Aye, aye, sir,' cheerily cried little King-Post, sweeping round his great steering oar. 'Lay back!' addressing his crew. 'There!--there!-- there again! There she blows right ahead, boys!--lay back!
 'Never heed yonder yellow boys, Archy.'
 'Oh, I don't mind'em, sir,' said Archy; 'I knew it all before now. Didn't I hear 'em in the hold? And didn't I tell Cabaco here of it? What say ye, Cabaco? They are stowaways, Mr. Flask.'
 'Pull, pull, my fine hearts-alive; pull, my children; pull, my little ones,' drawlingly and soothingly sighed Stubb to his crew, some of whom still showed signs of uneasiness. (Melville, 1851) (MTC/HF/HM/2)

Conrad too, writing some 70 years later, reproduces a thoroughly believable, if somewhat sanitised, sense of the sailors' vernacular:

As soon as his head was clear of the fiddle he began to scold Jukes for not trimming properly the stokehold ventilators; and in answer Jukes made with his hands deprecatory soothing signs meaning: 'No wind--can't be helped--you can see for yourself.' But the other wouldn't hear reason. His teeth flashed angrily in his dirty face. He didn't mind, he said, the trouble of punching their blanked heads down there, blank his soul, but did the condemned sailors think you could keep steam up in the God-forsaken boilers simply by knocking the blanked stokers about? No, by George! You had to get some draught, too--may he be everlastingly blanked for a swab-headed deck-hand if you didn't! And the chief, too, rampaging before the steam-gauge and carrying on like a lunatic up and down the engine-room ever since noon. What did Jukes think he was stuck up there for, if he couldn't get one of his decayed, good-for-nothing deck-cripples to turn the ventilators to the wind?

(Conrad, 1919) (MTC/HF/JC/6)

While the plots and situations of these novels may be fictitious and the utterances invented, there is no reason to believe that the maritime language used by these authors is not representative of the discourse, particularly with regard to the technical terms used.

Collecting 'natural' maritime speech would involve a considerable investment in time and money to identify subjects, record them and transcribe the data. While it is possible that sources such as BBC sound archives and various spoken language projects may have such material, obtaining it and including it in the corpus was beyond the resources available for this project. It would however be an interesting and useful project to undertake. The inclusion of spoken data would provide more evidence of the actual use of maritime language, unmediated by the process of writing and the needs and desires of authors to provide interesting, informative and comprehensible texts.

6.5 Implications and Applications

In this section, I discuss the implications of the research and its possible applications. This leads to consideration of further work that could be undertaken to follow up this project and other areas for which it may have relevance.

6.5.1 Implications

One of the notable features of the metaphorised expressions looked at in this study, and illustrated in Table 36, (above) is the widespread use to which they are put. ANCHOR, for instance, is found in every category except that of resonator, and even an apparently concrete term like ARMADA, whose reference would appear to be quite specific, is used in the data as a technical term, a transfer, an active conventionalised metaphor and a resonator.

The domains of use are also spread widely, but key areas include politics, finance, business and sport. These are all closely connected domains and, indeed, it is often difficult to differentiate between them; the business, finance and sport domains frequently overlap, especially in reportage, so that it is not always clear whether reports about, say, a football club's success, or a Formula 1 racing team, are more concerned with sporting or financial performance. Similarly, the political discourse is primarily centred on financial and business concerns; the economy and distribution of wealth being at the heart of political debate. They all use MCMs to express concepts of their functions in terms of FINANCE = SEA, PROJECT = VOYAGE, PARTY/ COMPANY/ TEAM = SHIP. Which perhaps explains why the use of MEs in these domains is so consistent.

MEs are often used in extended chains of metaphors, to produce particular stylistic effects and to evoke cultural resonances. As Stubbs, citing the work of Firth puts it: 'language in use transmits culture' (1996:43). Long before computerised corpora were available Firth proposed 'research into the distribution of socially important words'(1935:40). Stubbs goes on to review the work of Said (1978), Raymond Williams (1976) and a number of others, on cultural 'keywords' and concludes:

Such examples illustrate a clear general argument: fixed and semi-fixed expressions (collocations, catch-phrases, clichés and idioms) encode cultural information (Stubbs, 1996:169)

He cites Moon (1994), who suggests that fixed phrases:

represent socio-cultural schemata and appeal to shared cultural values, by making allusions, exploiting quotations and using metaphors and proverbs.

(Stubbs, 1996:171)

Schäffner discusses the significance of cultural association in metaphor in the field of translation studies and explores:

...how the cross-linguistic and cross-cultural perspective of translation can contribute to metaphor theory. (2004:1254)

The study has, I believe, shown that MCMs are an integral component of the cultural expression of English speakers that permeates every part of British culture, from parliamentary discourse to pop music. They are particularly important in sports and political reportage, and also in the business and financial discourses where many of these expressions originated, as a result of the maritime trade that fuelled Britain's growth.

6.5.2 Applications

The starting point for this project was academic curiosity rather than applied linguistics, however, there are a number of areas that have possible applications for other linguistic researchers, particularly in the area of metaphor studies, as well as some useful findings for the teaching of English in EFL and EAP classrooms and especially in the teaching of English to international mariners; an area of increasing importance throughout the world, as English has become the international language at sea and minimum standards of proficiency are being demanded of trainee marine officers (Reguzzoni, 2008). Surveys carried out in this area have demonstrated a serious deficiency in quality and relevance of available materials, where the focus of materials has tended to be on grammar and standard EFL materials, rather than vocationally specific maritime teaching materials and, in particular, problems arise with the disambiguation of maritime phrases that also occur in non-maritime contexts (Ziarati et al., 2008, Shen, 2010). The MTC provides 8.8 million words as data and a simple methodology for finding and testing specialised language. The corpus provides a simple model for the construction of corpora of more technical and specialised maritime texts that could provide more appropriate material than is currently available in many classrooms.

The identification and description of a set of significant maritime conceptual metaphors is a useful contribution to the teaching of EFL, as it provides a cultural context for so much of the idiomatic language students encounter, while the concordance and collocational data should be useful for teaching these specialised expressions that have been shown to be so common in the daily press and news reports, as well as in office and business environments.

On a more general academic level, the new metaphorical model, and in particular the new typology, which includes the category of resonator, can be applied in other areas of metaphor study and the description of figurative language to provide descriptions of particular discourses, genres and registers. The resonator is of interest because it provides a way of describing elements of language which can become effectively de-lexicalised, in certain contexts, for stylistic effect, but retain full semantic weight in others.

During my research, I have been unable to find any studies that specifically describe expressions from particular occupational discourses, beyond the academic and business fields. I believe this study provides a workable model for the analysis of other discourses that have influenced language development and left their traces in modern usage.

6.5.3 Limitations and future developments

The MTC needs to be bigger and better balanced; as it stands, the Historical Fiction texts dominate the data, and the number of writers represented in that subcorpus is too small. The News Texts subcorpus is also much too small and, due to the limitations of OCR scanning, much of the data in elements of the News Texts, especially the Naval Chronicles, is all but unusable. For future development, these issues need to be addressed and there is a bigger challenge to be faced in the collection and processing of spoken data for inclusion in the MTC, which at present is entirely absent from the corpus.

The most obvious shortcoming of the study, as whole, is the very small data sample of just 61 keywords that has been analysed. However, now that the methodology has been developed and the metaphorical model is in place, the next stage will be to complete the MTC keyword analysis so that a profile of MEs from A-Z can be produced which, in turn, will provide the opportunity to fully map the range of MCMs currently being expressed in modern English and map those onto the overall conceptual metaphor framework proposed originally by Lakoff and Johnson, Kövecses and others, and now being investigated through the Historical Thesaurus of the OED at Glasgow University in the Mapping Metaphor project (Anderson, 2013, Hough, 2013).

6.6 Summary

This study has examined a very specific area of discourse that has for hundreds of years been at the heart of British culture and sense of identity. In Britain, no one is ever more than some 70 miles from the sea, and even at the furthest point inland, the canal and river networks connect the population to the sea and its trading vessels and people.

In a world of rapid change, characterised by issues such as globalisation, climate change, resource scarcity and population growth to name but a few, the crucial importance of the sea to the UK remains unchanged. We are a maritime trading nation whose national interests are truly international both in terms of our security and our prosperity. (MOD, 2011)

Britain's history and position in the world have long been defined by the sea; as Lord Palmerston pointed out in a speech to the House of Commons in 1851:

so long as England shall ride preeminent on the ocean of human affairs, there can be none whose fortunes shall be so shipwrecked—there can be none whose condition shall be so desperate and forlorn—that they may not cast a look of hope towards the light that beams from hence; and though they may be beyond the reach of our power, our moral support and our sympathy shall cheer them in their adversity, and shall assist them to bear up, and to hold out, waiting for a better day. (Speech to the House of Commons 18th May 1851)
(Francis, 1852)

By building a corpus of maritime texts, taken from as wide a range of sources and genres as was available, it was my intention to provide some insight into the maritime metaphors that inform our modern discourse and find the source of those expressions, which have become so integral to the way we think about politics, society, business and ourselves. In this I believe I have succeeded, and have demonstrated that there is an underlying network of maritime conceptual metaphors that influences our sense of cultural and linguistic identity. This study is, to use a maritime metaphor, only the tip of the iceberg and the mapping of these maritime expressions is at an early stage, but this work at least prepares the way for that more in-depth study.

ABAFT. This word, generally speaking, means behind, inferred relatively, beginning from the stem and continuing towards the stern, that is, the hinder part of the ship.--Abaft the beam implies any direction between a supposed transverse line amidships and the stern, whether in or out of the ship. It is the relative situation of an object with the ship, when that object is placed in the arc of the horizon contained between a line at right angles with the keel and the point of the compass which is directly opposite the ship's course. An object--as a man overboard--is described by the look-out man at the mast-head as abeam, before, or abaft the beam, by so many points of the compass. As a vessel seen may be "three points before the beam," &c. (1867:11)

The main collocate of ABEAM in MTC is WIND, which occurs 25 times, 13 of which are in the expression WITH THE WIND ABEAM, 11 of these coming from C.S Forester's 'Captain Hornblower' trilogy of books. Indeed an interesting feature of ABEAM is the regularity with which certain modern writers of maritime fiction seem to use the expression, as if to give a more authentic maritime feel to their writing.

BOARD

V. A ship's side. [Old English bord: reinforced by Old French bord, and perhaps by Old Norse borð, Danish bord.]

12. Naut.

a. The side of a ship. (...) Now only in phrases, as within board, without board; over (the) board, over the ship's side, out of the ship, into the sea; weather-board ... cf. larboard n. and adj., starboard n. and adj., etc.)

(OED 3rd Ed. Sep. 2009))

As demonstrated by the OED definition above, BOARD, in its nautical sense, originally referred to the side of a ship, hence the expressions Starboard and Larboard, used to describe positions relative to the vessel, this also gives rise to expressions such as boarding party and boarders, referring to forces attacking and coming ON BOARD an enemy ship by force.

The MEs ABOARD and ON BOARD are members of a distinct lexical group with the headword BOARD. This group also includes the verb TO BOARD and the phrasal verb TO GO BY THE BOARD, along with the noun phrase BOARDING PARTY and BOARDERS. Also in this group are GO OVERBOARD, THROW OVERBOARD and MAN OVERBOARD. The BOARD family of MEs can be illustrated thus:

There is also a variant spelling, ABOORD, which appears eight times in one specific text (Figure 19, below) as a dialect form:

These two multi-word expressions, COME ABOARD and WELCOME ABOARD are clearly MEs that have made the transition from the purely maritime discourse to a more figurative use in the general discourse. However, the transference of COME/ WELCOME ABOARD to other forms of transport in the BNC, where it refers to space-ships, aircraft, coaches and trains, where the only real change is the application of the term to another type of physical vehicle, with other aspects of meaning remaining fundamentally unaltered, is a weaker metaphor than those instances where the vehicle is more abstract, such as a club, sports team, company or political party, or even an ideology or social movement. Where the meaning of the expression has been radically altered as it has moved from its maritime origins into a completely new semantic field, it is regarded as a stronger metaphor.

Classification: ME; Fixed MWE: (WELCOME + (Object) + ABOARD) literal + conventionalised (Transparent) metaphor with strong maritime resonances leading to extended metaphors.

As a weak metaphor, has transferred into a range of other transport contexts, such as aviation, rail, coach travel and space,

The stronger metaphorical form is used in more abstract contexts of business, social groupings, ideologies etc. Fields of Business, Politics, Reportage, Sport, Transport and Social discourse.

4.6 TAKE ABOARD // TAKE ON BOARD

Chapter 5.7.9	Frequencies	MTC	BNC

MTC has 346 occurrences of TAKE* + ON BOARD, of which just two are metaphorical uses of the target expression:

- 2 e word that has only just been taken on-board by the masses
- 3 ost part these handy hints are taken on-board and acted upon

Both of these come from a single modern web text. There are then 216 literal applications of the target ME, as illustrated by the ten lines below:

In the BNC data, there is close synonymy between ABOARD and ON BOARD in certain metaphorical constructions, which can lead to a blurring of the meaning-boundaries between them as below:

This may be a consequence of the increasing distance between the original maritime use of the expression and its modern use, where the maritime resonances are weakening as the expression becomes increasingly widely used outside the maritime context.

In the BNC there are just 14 instances of the literal, maritime use of TAKE* ON BOARD;

The most common figurative meaning found is that of 'taking into consideration or understanding a circumstance or particular factor in a situation'. It generally has a semantic prosody (Louw, 1993, Sinclair, 2004) that suggests that the fact is somewhat unpalatable to the recipient or difficult to come to terms with. This is presumably a resonance from the original maritime meaning of taking additional cargo or personnel on to a ship, with the concomitant difficulties of stowage and accommodation that would be entailed.

¹ Note that line 6 of Figure 29 is actually a different construction (TAKING PICTURES), rather than the target construction of TAKING (i.e. carrying) SOMETHING ON BOARD

Additional metaphorical meanings are “to accept an additional burden” or to “accept or employ additional staff” or “To take on extra work or duties”. There are also the same sorts of weak metaphorical transferences that we have seen with WELCOME ABOARD; where the literal term is applied to vessels other than ships, in particular, aircraft, coaches and trains.

However, despite the widespread adoption of the metaphor, there are no extended metaphors in the BNC data to suggest that the maritime resonances are still relevant to modern users, even though the literal and metaphorical forms are both still in use, albeit, the maritime use is clearly specialised and therefore far less common in the general discourse than is the figurative use. This suggests that the ME should, perhaps, be regarded as an historical rather than a conventional metaphor. Furthermore, in Moon’s terms (1998) it is at best, semi-transparent, and possibly opaque to those unfamiliar with the maritime expression. In Hanks’ terms (2006), it could be argued that the expression has, through frequency of use, lost its metaphorical force and become an idiomatic phrase with its own literal meaning.

(OED 2012)

A further member of this group is GO BY THE BOARD, which occurs eight times in MTC the literal meaning of which is clearly seen in Figure 31, below, where only the last concordance (line 8), taken from Conrad's 'The Rescue', uses it metaphorically.

In the BNC, the expression occurs just seven times and is always figurative:

There are no apparent maritime resonances being exploited in any of these examples from the BNC, which suggests that this is an historical metaphor, or, as with TAKE ABACK, has become phrasal verb, which, through frequent use, has become an idiomatic expression, that can be regarded as having a literal meaning in its own right.

In the admittedly sparse data presented here, it appears to be used particularly with abstract subjects, such as truth, morality, dreams, status and ideals, rather than concrete entities; showing a marked contrast with the original ME. However, there is an interesting relationship with the sort of concrete subjects seen in the MTC data: masts, bowsprits, "Java" (a type of spinnaker sail), all of which are part of the apparatus that gives a ship direction and forward momentum, and the function of the abstractions that are the subject of the metaphorical expression, to give direction in life. This suggests that the metaphor is still active at some level, and these resonances still have a bearing on the expression's meaning.

Classification: ME; Fixed MWE; Historical (Opaque) Metaphor; Field: abstract ideology.

ABOVE BOARD	10	51

Both Jeans (2004:35) and Isil (1996:3) and before them, Smyth (1867), claim this to be a maritime expression.

ABOVE-BOARD. Over the deck; a term used for open fair dealing, without artifice or trick.

(Smyth, 1867:13)

In the BNC, the expression occurs 51 times without any reference to maritime matters, while MTC has only 10 examples of the phrase (Figure 38, below), including Smyth's definition, as cited above. Six of these uses come from a single author, Tobias Smollett in two novels: Roderick Random, 1748 and Peregrine Pickle, 1751, whose characters famously lace their speech with sailor's slang, as illustrated by the full context of line 1 below,

"You shouldn't want a smock nor a petticoat neither, if you could have a kindness for a true-hearted sailor, as sound and strong as a nine-inch cable, that would keep all clear above board, and everything snug under the hatches."

(Smollett 1751)

which suggests that Smollett, at least, agrees with the maritime use of the phrase, juxtaposing 'ABOVE BOARD', i.e. above deck, with 'under the hatches' i.e. below deck. The other three concordance lines come from Melville (L6), James Fenimore Cooper (L7) and Captain Marryat (L8).

10 an't you, to tell me so above-board to my face? Did I take

Clearly, sailors used the term, although not literally in any of these lines. The OED gives no indication of any maritime connection, but, rather more convincingly, connects the expression to card playing and dealing 'above board', where the BOARD is a table rather than a ship's deck. It is possible, and indeed likely, that sailors adopted the existing figurative expression as their own, as it fits so well with the other BOARD family of MEs, however, the lack of evidence for any literal, technical maritime use for the term suggests this is probably not an ME.

Abyss, n.

Forms:

α. ME–16 abissus, ME–16 abyssus, IME abyssi.

Etymology: < post-classical Latin abyssus bottomless pit (early 3rd cent. in Tertullian), primal chaos, pit of Hell, depth of wisdom (Vulgate), depth of sin (c400), depth of obscurity (8th cent. in a British source), depth of grief (from 13th cent. in British sources) < Hellenistic Greek ἄβυσσος the great deep, primal chaos (Septuagint), pit of Hell (New Testament)...

a. The primal formless chaos out of which the earth and the heavens were created.

b. In the ancient Hebrew cosmogony of the Old Testament: a vast subterranean body of water, the source of terrestrial water and of the Flood. Also: (in other cosmogonies) a primordial ocean on which the earth floated.

1941 A. E. Haydon Biogr. Gods i. 15 An ancient myth, well-known in India and Europe, taught that the Creator was born from a cosmic egg which floated on the abyss of primeval waters.

1990 Omni Nov. 64/3 The waters of the Abyss had burst forth from the springs of the earth, and the waters of heaven had poured through the sluice gates in the vault.

c. The great deep or bottomless gulf believed in old cosmogonies to lie beneath the earth; the infernal pit, the abode of the dead, hell.

3. fig. An extremity of some condition or quality (usually a negative one); a condition from which recovery is impossible or unlikely.

admiral, n.

Etymology: A borrowing immediately from Anglo-Norman, Old French, Middle French, and post-classical Latin, showing a number of distinct form types, most or all of which probably reflect foreign-language influence:

1. In Arabic and some other non-European countries: a ruler, military commander, or prince; = emir n.
1. hist. in later use.

c1275—2004

a. A commander of a naval fleet or squadron (see also admiral of the fleet n. at Phrases 2); (the title of) a naval officer of high rank, spec. one below the rank of Admiral of the Fleet. Cf. flag-officer n., vice-admiral n. 1a.

There are usually three grades of admiral, admiral, vice admiral, and rear admiral, corresponding respectively to the grades of general, lieutenant general, and major general in the army. See also rear admiral n., under-admiral n., vice-admiral n.

admiral of the red (also blue, white): see the final element; similarly yellow admiral.

1429—1999

b. The senior commanding officer of a country's navy. In early use freq. in admiral of the sea. See also Lord High Admiral n. at lord n. Compounds 2.

1440—1997

c. A commander of a fishing or merchant fleet, or of the port used for such a fleet. In early use also: (Newfoundland) one appointed with certain privileges as a result of captaining the first vessel to arrive at a particular harbour in a given season (see quot. 1708); = fishing admiral n. at fishing n. 1 Compounds 2. Cf. port admiral n. at port n. 1 Compounds 2, vice-admiral n. 1c.

1589—1992

Smyth

ADMIRAL. ... The admiral is the chief commander of a fleet, but of this rank there are three degrees, distinguished by a flag at the fore, main, or mizzen mast, according to the title of admiral, vice-admiral, or rear-admiral. ...

The admiral of the fleet is the highest officer under the admiralty of Great Britain; it is rather an honorary distinction, and usually attained by seniority and service: when this officer serves afloat, he hoists the proud distinction of the Union flag at the main.

The lord high-admiral was one of the principal officers of the state, who formerly decided all cases relating to the sea: he wore a gold call and chain, similar in form to that which has descended to the boatswain and his mate. This dignity has been extinct for many years, and the duty merged into that of the lords-commissioners and admiralty court; in 1827, it was revived for a short time in the person of His Royal Highness the Duke of Clarence.

The epithet of admiral was also formerly applied to any large or leading ship, without reference to flag; and is still used for the principal vessel in the cod and whale fisheries. That which arrives first in any port of Newfoundland retains this title during the season, with certain rights of beach in flakes. The master of the second ship becomes the vice-admiral, and the master of the third the rear-admiral.

OED. (3rd Ed. Dec 2011)

admiralty, n.

Etymology: < Anglo-Norman and Middle French admiralté, amiralté, Middle French admiralité ...

1.

a. The branch of justice concerned with maritime questions and offences. Also: legal matters relating to this. Freq. in court of admiralty n. a court exercising jurisdiction over such matters, spec. (Brit.) that formerly presided over by the Lord High Admiral (lord n. Compounds 2). See also Admiralty court n. at Compounds 2, Droits of Admiralty at droit n. 1a.

In Britain courts of admiralty came under the jurisdiction of the admiralty (in sense 1b), making the two senses difficult to distinguish. The Court of Admiralty was absorbed into the Probate, Divorce, and Admiralty Division of the High Court of Justice in 1887, and in 1971 its functions passed to the Admiralty Court in the Queen's Bench Division.

1419—1993

b. Also with capital initial. The governing body or department in charge of a country's navy and its administration; spec. (Brit.) that in charge of the Royal Navy. Chiefly with the. See also board of admiralty n. at Phrases 1, Admiralty Board n. at Compounds 2.

First Lord of the Admiralty, Marshal of the Admiralty, etc.: see the first element; also Black Book of the Admiralty.

1459—1998

c. With capital initial. The building in which the business of such a governing body or department is transacted.

Later spec. used of a number of government buildings near Whitehall in London, the oldest of which was built in 1726.

1617—1979

ADMIRALTY. An office for the administration of naval affairs, presided over by a lord high-admiral, whether the duty be discharged by one person, or by commissioners under the royal patent, who are styled lords, and during our former wars generally consisted of seven. The present constitution of the Board of Admiralty comprises--the first lord, a minister and civilian as to office; four naval lords; one civil lord attending to accounts, &c.; one chief secretary; one second secretary. Two lords and one secretary form a legal Board of Admiralty wherever they may be assembled, under the authority of the board or its chief.

ADMIRALTY COURT. The constitution of this court relatively to the legislative power of the king in council, is analogous to that of the courts of common law relatively to the parliament of the kingdom. High Court of Admiralty, a supreme court of law, in which the authority of the lord high-admiral is ostensibly exercised in his judicial capacity for the trial of maritime causes of a civil nature. Although termed the High Court of Admiralty, more properly this is the Court of Vice-Admiralty, and relates solely to civil and military matters of the sea, and sea boundaries, prizes, collisions, vessels or goods cast on the shore where the vice-admirals have civil jurisdiction, but no naval power, as the lord-lieutenants of counties are named in their patents "vice-admirals of the same;" in like manner all governors of colonies. All cases in connection are tried by the Admiralty Court in London, or by our "courts of vice-admiralty and prize jurisdictions abroad." Admirable as some of the decisions of this expensive tribunal have been, it has all the powers of the Inquisition in its practice, and has thereby been an instrument of persecution to some innocent navigators, while it has befriended notorious villains. Besides this we have the Admiralty Court of Oyer and Terminer, for the trial of all murders, piracies, or criminal acts which occur within the limits of the country, on the coast-lines, at sea, or wherever the admiralty jurisdiction extends--the deck of a British ship included.

18.1.2 FLOATING (Adjective)

The collocates list in Table 18 shows that, in MTC, all occurrences of FLOATING are literal and distinctly maritime, whereas, in stark contrast, in the BNC, the term is predominantly figurative with a very high incidence of financial / mathematical and political terms.

This is further highlighted by the clusters list (Table 19), which clearly shows how specialised the adjectival term FLOATING has become. Expressions such as FLOATING CHARGE, FLOATING EXCHANGE RATE(S) and FLOATING RATE(S) are clear examples of the adoption of maritime terms in the financial markets and FLOATING POINT in mathematics, while in the political domain we have FLOATING VOTER.

18.1.3 FLOAT (N)

While the verb form of FLOAT has been effectively covered in the previous sections, the nominal form produces some interesting data.

FLOAT [Anglo-Saxon 'fleet' or 'fleet']. A place where vessels float, as at Northfleet. Also, the inner part of a ship-canal. In wet-docks ships are kept afloat while loading and discharging cargo. Two double gates having a lock between them, allow the entry and departure of vessels without disturbing the inner level. Also, a raft or quantity of timber fastened together, to be floated along a river by a tide or current.

(Smyth, 1867))

Smyth's definition, above, suggests a number of highly specialised uses of the word and includes its links with the Anglo-Saxon fleet. Clearly the word is fundamentally maritime,

The key differences for FLOAT, in the two corpora, lies in the expansion of meanings and the complexity of overall patterns of use evident in the BNC.

In MTC, with very few exceptions, the word is used in its literal sense of a buoyancy device in connection with the sea and related activity.

In the BNC, applications of the word are more complex and extensive and, as we might expect in a general corpus, cover a much wider range of contexts and activities. While the fishing context is in line with maritime use, as found in MTC, other areas, and in particular, economics, science and technology have clearly gained in significance, as Figure 104 and Figure 105 (below) illustrate. While FLOAT retains its use in the sense of physical buoyancy, the applications have broadened.

It is clear that FLOAT, despite its wide application and the variety of forms seen here, is still, very much tied to its maritime roots, even in such specialised and esoteric fields as physics:

In terms of a classical wave picture of light the electrons would all be agitated by the electromagnetic radiation, bobbing up and down like anchored buoys in an ocean swell.

Whether they would break loose from their moorings and float away would depend upon the violence of the waves, the intensity of the radiation.

It would not be expected to depend particularly on the frequency, the rate at which the waves rose and fell.

18.1.4 FLOTATION

OED

Flotation, n.

1a. The action, fact, or process of floating, in various senses; the condition of keeping afloat. attrib. Applied to any device that gives buoyancy.

centre of flotation : the centre of gravity in a floating body. plane or line of flotation = French flottaison, ligne de flottaison, the plane or line in which the horizontal surface of a fluid cuts a body floating in it. stable flotation: the position of stable equilibrium in a floating body.

2. The action of floating a company or enterprise.,

Draft additions January 2005

spec. The action or an act of floating in a buoyant salt solution heated to body temperature inside a special light-proof, sound-proof tank, in order to achieve sensory deprivation and hence relaxation.

Usu. attrib., esp. in flotation tank

(OED 2010)

LINES OF FLOTATION. Those horizontal marks supposed to be described by the surface of the water on the bottom of a ship, and which are exhibited at certain depths upon the sheer-draught. (1867: 448)

Although it does not appear in the keyword list, this term is related to AFLOAT and the FLOAT family of expressions, so is dealt with in this section.

In MTC, FLOTATION occurs four times (Figure 107), found only in Smyth (1867), in the phrase LINE(S) OF FLOTATION comes second to this maritime definition, even though, in the BNC, the financial meaning is overwhelmingly predominant; out of 271 instances, just 28 (10%) are non-financial and of those, only six might be described, albeit loosely, as maritime (Figure 108)

Forms:

α. OE æftemest, OE æftemynstan (weak declension, accusative, prob. transmission error), OE æftemyst, eME eftemest.

β. eME aftermost, 16– aftermost.

Etymology: In α. forms cognate with or formed similarly to Gothic aftumists... Compare also (rare) Old English æfterest (see after adj.).

Apparently unattested between the early 13th and early 17th centuries.

AFTER. A comparative adjective, applied to any object in the hind part of a ship or boat; as, the after-cabin, the after-hatchway, &c. After-sails, yards, and braces--those attached to the main and mizen masts. Opposed to fore.

AFTER-BODY. That part of the ship's hull which is abaft the midships or dead-flat, as seen from astern. The term is, however, more particularly used in expressing the figure or shape of that part of the ship.

AFTER-END. The stern of a ship, or anything in her which has that end towards the stern.

AFTER-GUARD. The men who are stationed on the quarter-deck and poop, to work the after-sails. It was generally composed of ordinary seamen and landsmen, constituting with waisters the largest part of the crew, on whom the principal drudgery of the ship devolved. At present the crews of ships-of-war are composed chiefly of able and ordinary seamen--landsmen are omitted.

AFTER-LADDER leads to captain's and officers' quarters, and only used by officers.

AFTERMOST. The last objects in a ship, reckoned from forwards; as, the aftermost mast, aftermost guns, &c.

AFTER-ORDERS. Those which are given out after the regular issue of the daily orders.

AFTER-PART. The locality towards the stern, from dead-flat; as, in the after-part of the fore-hold.

AFTER-PEAK. The contracted part of a vessel's hold, which lies in the run, or aftermost portion of the hold, in contradistinction to fore-peak. Both are the sharp ends of the ship.

AFTER-RAKE. That part of the hull which overhangs the after-end of keel.

AFTER-SAILS. All those on the after-masts, as well as on the stays between the main and mizen masts. Their effect is to balance the head-sails, in the manner that a weather-cock or vane is moved, of which the main-mast must be considered the pivot or centre. The reverse of head-sails. "Square the after-yards," refers to the yards on the main and mizen masts.

AFTER-TIMBERS. All those timbers abaft the midship section or bearing part of a vessel.

Anglo Norman : change or modify (person or thing)

1. trans.

a. To make (a person or thing) otherwise or different in some respect; to modify, to change the appearance of. Also intr. (OED 3rd Ed. Nov.2009)

OED (1st Ed. 1893 / Online 2013)

COURSE originates from Middle English and the French cours and is cited from the late 13th century with the meaning

a. Onward movement in a particular path, as of the heavenly bodies, a ship, etc.

12. a. Naut. The direction in which, or point of the compass towards which, a ship sails. Hence transf. of the direction or line pursued by an ocean-current, mountain-chain, vein of ore, etc. Also of aircraft: the (correct) line or direction of flight.

VI. Naut.

33. Each of the sails attached to the lower yards of a ship; now usually restricted to the fore-sail (fore-course) and main-sail (main-course). Formerly including also the stay-sails upon the lower masts: cf. quot. 1769.

Smyth

COURSE. The direction taken by anything in motion, shown by the point of the compass 'towards' which they run, as water in a river, tides, and currents; but of the wind, as similarly indicated by the compass-point 'from' which it blows. Course is also the ship's way. In common parlance, it is the point of the compass upon which the ship sails, the direction in which she proceeds, or is intended to go. When the wind is foul, she cannot "lie her course;" if free, she "steers her course."

COURSES. A name by which the sails hanging from the lower yards of a ship are usually distinguished, viz. the main-sail, fore-sail, and mizen: the staysails upon the lower masts are sometimes also comprehended in this denomination, as are the main staysails of all brigs and schooners. A ship is under her courses when she has no sail set but the fore-sail, main-sail, and mizen. 'Trysails' are courses (which see), sometimes termed 'bentincks'. (1867:218) amain, adv.

Pronunciation:

Etymology: < a prep.1 in, on, at + main v.3, Old English mægn, power, force. Apparently not preceded by an earlier full on mægn, on main, but formed in 16th cent. after words in a-, as afoot.

1.

a. lit. In, or with, full force; with main force, with all one's might; vehemently, violently.

Smyth

AMAIN [Saxon a, and mægn, force, strength]. This was the old word to an enemy for "yield," and was written amayne and almayne. Its literal signification is, with force or vigour, all at once, suddenly; and it is generally used to anything which is moved by a tackle-fall, as "lower amain!" let run at once. When we used to demand the salute in the narrow seas, the lowering of the top-sail was called striking amain, and it was demanded by the wave amain or brandishing a bright sword to and fro. amidships, adv.

Etymology: prop. a phrase, = 'in the ship's middle, in centre of the ship,' retaining the genitive which originally followed amid adv. and prep., as in amid-heaps. The phr. must therefore be old though instances begin late.

a. In the middle of a ship; rarely, to or towards the middle of the ship.

b. transf. (colloq.).

1937 E. Partridge Dict. Slang 12/1 Amidships, on the solar plexus; in or on the belly.

1961 Times 11 July 4/7 Buss hit him painfully amidships and he had to leave the field.

AMIDSHIPS. The middle of the ship, whether in regard to her length between stem and stern, or in breadth between the two sides. To put the helm amidships is to place it in a line with the keel. The term however, has a more general bearing to the axis of the ship; as guns, or stores, or place amidships has reference to that line, fore and aft. Externally the term "amidships" as to striking, boarding, &c., would be about the main-mast, or half the length of the ship. (1867:36)

ANCHOR. A large and heavy instrument in use from the earliest times for holding and retaining ships, which it executes with admirable force. With few exceptions it consists of a long iron shank, having at one end a ring, to which the cable is attached, and the other branching out into two arms, with flukes or palms at their bill or extremity. A stock of timber or iron is fixed at right angles to the arms, and serves to guide the flukes perpendicularly to the surface of the ground.

At anchor, the situation of a ship which rides by its anchor.--To anchor, to cast or to let go the anchor, so that it falls into the ground for the ship to ride thereby.--To anchor with a spring on the cable.

Anchor is also used figuratively for anything which confers security or stability.

ATHWART. The transverse direction; anything extending or across the line of a ship's course.--'Athwart hawse', a vessel, boat, or floating lumber accidentally drifted across the stem of a ship, the transverse position of the drift being understood.--'Athwart the fore-foot', just before the stem; ships fire a shot in this direction to arrest a stranger, and make her bring-to.--Athwart ships, in the direction of the beam; from side to side: in opposition to 'fore-and-aft'. (1867:59)

HAWSE. This is a term of great meaning. Strictly, it is that part of a vessel's bow where holes are cut for her cables to pass through. It is also generally understood to imply the situation of the cables before the ship's stem, when she is moored with two anchors out from forward, one on the starboard, and the other on the port bow. It also denotes any small distance between her head and the anchors employed to ride her, as "he has anchored in our hawse," "the brig fell athwart our hawse," &c. Also, said of a vessel a little in advance of the stem; as, she sails athwart hawse, or has anchored in the hawse. If a vessel drives at her anchors into the hawse of another she is said to "foul the hawse" of the vessel riding there; hence the threat of a man-of-war's-man, "If you foul my hawse, I'll cut your cable," no merchant vessel being allowed to approach a ship-of-war within certain limits, and never to make fast to the government buoys.--A bold hawse is when the holes are high above the water. "Freshen hawse," or "veer out more cable," is said when part of the cable that lies in the hawse is fretted or chafed, and more should be veered out, so that another part of it may rest in the hawse. "Freshen hawse" also means, clap a service on or round the cable in the hawses to prevent it from fretting; hemp cables only are rounded or cackled. Also, a dram after fatiguing duty. "Clearing hawse," is untwisting or disentangling two cables that come through different holes, and make a foul hawse. (ibid:372)

⁵ NB. The BNC data for AWASH required some additional cleaning as it included one particular text (BNC Text: HOA) about the Awash River in Ethiopia, which resulted in 25 occurrences of the phrases Awash River and Awash Station so that STATION and RIVER appeared at the top of the collocates list. These 25 concordances were therefore removed, in order to more properly reflect the use of the term in the general discourse as represented by the BNC.

UNDER WAY. A ship beginning to move under her canvas after her anchor is started. Some have written this 'under weigh', but improperly. A ship is 'under weigh' when she has 'weighed' her anchor: she may be with or without canvas, or hove-to. As soon as she gathers way she is 'under way'. This a moot point with old seamen.

Etymology: A word of obscure origin, apparently at first only in nautical use. Probably to be referred (as by Wedgwood) to French auvent 'a penthouse of cloth, etc. before a shop window, etc.' Cotgrave, early plurals in Littré auvens, auvans, medieval Latin auvanna, auvannus, whence auvan*, auwn*, awn; the termination is of course English -ing suffix¹. E. Müller refers it to Low German havenung, < haven harbour, in sense of 'a shelter from wind and weather'; Skeat compares 'Persian áwan, áwang, anything suspended, awangān hanging, awnang a clothes-line'; but neither of these is applied in its own language to an awning; in particular an oriental origin seems incompatible with the history. French auvent is itself of doubtful etymol. See Diez, Littré, Du Cange.

See also Sweet Fanny Adams / Sweet FA: Fanny Adams (Sweet Fanny Adams) was the child victim of a notorious Victorian murder case. Fanny (or Frances) Adams aged nine was murdered at Alton, Hants on 24 April 1867. The murderer (Frederick Baker, a solicitor's clerk, aged 24) cut the body up into pieces, some of which were allegedly found in Deptford Victualling Yard. Baker was tried at Winchester and hanged in December 1867. At about this time tinned mutton was introduced into the Navy and soon acquired the name of Fanny Adams. The tins were subsequently used by sailors as mess gear. The name "fanny" is still the Naval slang for a cooking pot as well as being used in the nickname sense. GOD SAVE THE KING	In this Portsmouth fleet lay undeveloped the genius of the future naval greatness of England. A small fact connected with it is worth recording. The watchword on board was, 'God save the King'; the answer was, 'Long to reign over us': the earliest germ discoverable of the English National Anthem. Indeed, in nautical parlance, the words knot and mile are synonyms, alluding to the geographical mile of 60' to a degree of latitude. (Smythe-The Sailor's Word Book also SHOW the ropes MASTHEAD	in newspaper printing - Paper's title and logo. 'The Masthead is a list, usually found on the editorial page of a newspaper or magazine, of the members of the newspaper's editorial board. If no editorial board exists, the masthead will often feature a list of top news staff members. Some mastheads also include information such as the publication's founding date, slogan, logo and contact information. The term masthead is borrowed from the shipping industry, when a brass plate would be affixed to the main mast of a commercial sailing vessel. This plate contained the name of the owner or owners of a ship. In the UK, the word is used to refer to the nameplate of a publication, its designed title as it appears on its front page'. (Man-o'-War's-Man. By Bill Truck, senior boatswain of the Royal College of Greenwich. (London, 1843· William Blackwood and Sons.) (cited in Northcote Parkinson (2005) Portsmouth Point: the Navy in Fiction 1793-1815. Liverpool University Press; Liverpool)

PLAIN (PLANE) SAILING	PLANE-SAILING. That part of navigation which treats a ship's course as an angle, and the distance, difference of latitude, and easting or westing, as the sides of a right-angled triangle. The easting or westing is called departure. To convert this into difference of longitude, parallel, middle latitude, or Mercator's sailing is needed, depending on circumstances. Plane-sailing is so simple that it is colloquially used to express anything so easy that it is impossible to make a mistake. (Smyth 1867 the Sailor's Word-Book)

PUSH THE BOAT OUT
RATE OF KNOTS	The log line was a length of twine marked at 47.33-foot intervals by coloured knots. At one end was fastened a log chip; it was shaped like the sector of a circle and weighted at the rounded end with lead. When thrown over the stern, the log chip was floated pointing upward and and remains relatively stationary. To measure the ship's speed, a sailor would throw the log line over the stern and allow it to run free over the side for 28 seconds before hauling it aboard. He then counted the knots that had passed over the side to determine the ship's speed. (http://motomom.tripod.com/sea) (See also KNOT)
